Hitler Summons Envoys of Other Signatories to Conference.

Severance Threat Likely to Be Made

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 6.—Adolf Hitler tonight called a special session of the Reichstag for noon tomorrow and invited ambassadors of the four other nations which signed the Locarno Treaty to visit him before the national assembly convenes.

With a terse announcement the Reichsfuehrer summoned members of the parliament. Shortly afterward he invited the British, French, Italian and Belgian ambassadors to call on him successively, beginning at 10 a. m.

Well informed sources said Hitler, speaking personally before the Reichstag, will make a last appeal to the Locarno signatories to observe the spirit and letter of the treaty guaranteeing mutual security.

Denouncement Stayed.

Only if this appeal fails, these sources declared, will Germany denounce the pact.

It was learned the army general staff met today. The subject considered was not disclosed.

This meeting was considered to have unusual significance in the light of the forthcoming Reichstag session, officially announced to consider "administrative explanations" expected to deal with the treaty and the future German course in the Rhineland.

Late tonight it was learned the Minister of the Netherlands also was invited to visit Hitler tomorrow, although his country is not a Locarno signatory.

Inclusion of the Dutch minister was interpreted as an indication that Hitler will make a conciliatory declaration and assure representatives of the powers directly interested that a denunciation of the treaty would not mean a warlike policy.

Aid of the United States, it was understood, was solicited by France to warn Hitler of the consequence of a denunciation, but the American Government preferred to keep its hands off this European affair. The French were assured, however, America would bend all her efforts toward peace.

"Get-Together" Session.

Many members of the Prussian state council and the Reichstag attended a "get-together" session at the new air ministry tonight, leading to belief they had been given an advance indication of the background of tomorrow's session.

Announcement of the parliamentary session climaxed a day full of diplomatic maneuvering in expectancy of Hitler's latest "gift" to the nation before the annual Memorial Day Sunday.

The Official News Bureau announced the Reichstag session would be broadcast throughout the nation.

Some diplomats said Hitler might offer to return to the League of Nations if the demilitarized zone were abolished and under certain other conditions.

It was considered almost certain, however, that the Nazi leader would declare in a strong statement that France had violated the Locarno Treaty by ratifying the Franco-Soviet military pact.

Hitler again acted with the suddenness for which he had previously demonstrated fondness, recalling his surprise announcement a year ago when he disclosed the re-armament program.

If Hitler should denounce the Locarno Treaty his action might entail sending troops to the French frontier, informed sources predicted.

France Acts Desperately.

Traffic Parley Warns Public Vehicle Drivers

Bombers Raze Ethiopian City; Menace Capital

British Major Among Dead in Air Raid; Addis Ababa in Panic.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

Addis Ababa, March 6.—Italian airplanes, roaring deeper than ever into Ethiopia, spread death and destruction today and gave the capital a sleepless night as it prepared for bombardment tomorrow.

Events creating panic here included:

Rising indignation over bombing of a British ambulance unit at Quoram, where 19 persons, including hospital patients, were slain.

80,000 in Capital.

Unable to evacuate Addis Ababa with its population of 80,000 but fearful the destruction wrought at Debra Marcos will be duplicated here, authorities prepared to cope with a possible rain of death.

Thousands slept in the hills tonight while criers tramped the streets, repeating instructions as to where to flee in bombardment.

Fears were intensified today when a tri-motored Italian plane droned over the city on an observation flight.

Debra Marcos was reported a shambles. The Central Church, one of the oldest in Ethiopia, and two others were destroyed.

Bombed City a Shambles.

Many buildings were razed and flames started by bombs consumed many others.

Hundreds of people were milling in the market place. Casualties were numerous.

Foreign missionaries were reported safe.

Debra Markos is 110 miles northwest of Addis Ababa.

Many believed the appearance of the plane today constituted a veiled threat of what Addis Ababa may expect should Ethiopia fail to accept whatever peace terms Italy may stipulate.

It was believed tomorrow morning will find streets and markets deserted.

Emperor Haile Selassie telegraphed the League of Nations protesting "the deliberate and barbarous bombardment of the British ambulance unit at Quoram by Italian airplanes."

(Great Britain has protested the Quoram bombardment, in which 19 were killed, to the Italian government).

When killed, Burgoyne was retreating with the Fitourari Kabada's army north of Magdala.

Although 61, Burgoyne, well known fox huntsman in England and Ireland, came to Addis Ababa in November to offer his services. His wife and three children are in England.

He was placed in command of the Waldia Ethiopian Red Cross unit, which was bombed January 16 with 14 dead and 35 wounded.

Maj. Brown Delivers Ultimatum at Meeting in Commissioner Hazen's Office; Officials Promise Co-operation to Cut Fatalities.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Washington's public vehicle drivers—bus, street car, taxicab and truck—were warned yesterday at a District Building conference between transportation heads and local officials to adhere strictly to all traffic regulations or "take the consequences."

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent, described "the consequences" as drastic enforcement methods. He said:

"We are giving public vehicle drivers a chance to better observe traffic regulations. After this meeting, if we see no improvement, there is only one thing left—strict enforcement. We are ready for drastic measures. I want these drivers to know that the Police Department is prepared to act and will 'crack down' unless conditions improve."

The meeting was called as a "last warning" to these drivers. Fifteen transportation officials, representing taxi companies, street car and bus concerns and trucking interests, met in the office of Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen.

Meanwhile, at hearings before the House traffic sub-committee yesterday, the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, appeared as a surprise witness. He appealed for street safety, acting in his capacity as chairman of the traffic safety committee, American Automobile Association.

City Rule Stake Of Armed Foes In Pupil Strike

By the United Press.

Alameda, Calif., March 6.—Armed factions maneuvered for control of Alameda's city government tonight, while thousands of high and elementary school students continued a boisterous strike.

Arrayed against each other were Mayor Hans Roebke and his supporters and Chief of Police Verne Smith, the students and an estimated 10,000 adults.

The dispute arose over dismissal of William G. Paden, for 11 years school superintendent. Roebe, two city councilmen and their board of education appointees backed Einar Sorenson for Paden's post.

Chief Smith refused police protection to students who braved "picket lines" and dashed into practically deserted school buildings. Roebke, insisting a police inspector had called him "an unprintable name" when he asked such protection, hastily assembled a special force of armed employes, and temporarily threatened to seize the police department.

The chief and his 38 men converted headquarters into a potential alamo, and Roebke, on advice of District Attorney Earl Warren, announced abandonment of efforts to seize the department. At the same time, he kept his forces mobilized.

It was reported a parade of 200 American Legion cars would converge on the city hall. Whether an attempt would be made to establish a de facto government was not indicated. Prior to a mass meeting last night threats were made to seize all city offices and institute a citizens emergency government.

At the mass meeting, however, an estimated 10,000 parents and sympathizers of the students roared approval to suggestions that recall petitions be circulated against Mayor Roebke, City Manager B. Ray Fritz and two councilmen.

N.Y. Firm Gives Lift Employes Wage Increase

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 6.—Leaders of New York's building service strike claimed a major victory tonight with the signing of a truce between the union and the Prudence Co. covering 3,500 workers in 45 large apartment and business buildings.

The agreement, as announced at strike headquarters, carries a blanket wage increase of $2 a week and a "preferential shop" clause giving union members precedence when vacancies are filled.

At the same time the union carried its 6-day-old strike into 62 Manhattan hotels.

Claims that 8,000 elevator operators, chambermaids, housemen and other employes had walked out during the day were sharply disputed by hotel managements. In almost every case the operators contended there was little or no disruption of service.

Among the hotels placed in the strike column at union headquarters were such widely known establishments as the McAlpin, Beekman Towers, Navarro, Martinique, Mayfair, Barbizon-Plaza and others.

Simultaneously it was announced that the 56-story Chanin Building near Grand Central Terminal had averted a threatened strike by reaching a "gentlemen's agreement" granting weekly increase of $2. Negotiations on other points await the arrival from Havana of Henry Chanin, head of the operating company.

Signing of the Prudence Co. contract, in the presence of Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, marked the first major group defection from the real estate ranks, which have held out determinedly against the closed shop issue. The union claims to have negotiated numerous inde-

Vassar Aid Refused Harvard In 'Beef-Trust' Ballet Revolt

By the Associated Press.

Cambridge, Mass., March 6.—Rebuffs from four colleges piled up troubles today for a harried manager seeking beautiful girls to replace a rebellious "beef trust" ballet in a Harvard musical comedy.

The worries of Manager Andrew Hutchinson began when his star "chorines" — all men — in "Fifty Grand," to be presented March 19-21 by the exclusive Pi Eta Club, flatly refused to shave their legs.

When Hutchinson's brawny ballet—two of them on the Harvard football varsity—wouldn't give in, he appealed to the deans of Bryn Mawr, Vassar, Smith and Sarah Lawrence College for help.

Dean Helen Taft Manning, of Bryn Mawr, replied that outside performances would be impossible because of preparation for the college's May Day.

Lupescu Poundage May Kill Romance

Vienna, March 6 (U.P.).—Red-haired Mme. Magda Lupescu's slowly increasing waistline may finally break up her long romance with King Carol of Rumania, it was learned tonight.

According to reports, this fascinating woman, who has been the King's favorite for many years, has started an intensive slimming course, to hold the affections of her royal lover.

Rumania's leading statesmen have endeavored for the last ten years to shatter this love bond, which has caused King Carol many difficulties, including temporary loss of the throne.

Mme. Lupescu, it was reported, reached 150 pounds in weight during her recent trip to Paris with Carol because she neglected to obey strict dietary rules.

Prison Break Takes 3 Lives; Escape Foiled

Kidnaped Warden, Felon and Bystander Die in South Dakota.

2 Others Shot as Posse Balks Flight of Trio in Gun Battle.

By the Associated Press.

Sioux Falls, S. Dak., March 6.—A hitch-hiking Kansas gunman who sought to release his brother from the penitentiary brought death to three persons and wounds to two others here today in one of the most sensational prison breaks in the history of the State.

Warden Eugene Reiley, 72, and Phil Ray, St. Paul desperado serving 30 years for bank robbery, were killed in a running gun fight with a posse. Berlan Meisel, of Webster, S. Dak., died in a hospital early tonight from wounds suffered when he and his fiancee, Miss Freda Rausch, also of Webster, were ordered from their car by the fleeing convicts.

Miss Rausch was slightly wounded. Claude Carrier, 18-year-old Kansan who engineered the escape, was critically wounded in the chase and George Collins, a deputy sheriff, also suffered gunshot wounds.

Meisel was shot over the heart and Miss Rausch wounded in the face when the gunmen ordered them from their car and took the vehicle in a wild dash for freedom.

Reiley, warden at the prison since August 1, 1933, may have been a victim of officers' guns. He was found shot in the back in the rear seat of the gunmen's car and died en route to a hospital.

Caught in Hour.

The sensational attempt at prison delivery came with startling suddenness shortly after 2:30 p. m. Less than an hour later Ray and Reiley were dead and Claude Carrier and his brother, Harold, were back inside the prison walls. The younger Carrier was shot in the head and shoulder, but his brother was uninjured.

Blood-soaked and weak, Claude Carrier, who said he hitch-hiked here from Kansas City, gave police a vivid account of the prison break in which he and his brother held up a dozen guards and trusties, released Ray and kidnaped Reiley as hostage. They stole three automobiles in their brief mad dash for freedom, which ended in a hail of lead five miles from the penitentiary.

"I stuck two gats under my belt and went up to ask the warden if I could see my brother," Carrier said. "I talked with my brother for about 10 minutes and told him what the plan was. He said 'okay' and when I got through talking I pulled out a gun and covered the guy nearest me. I gave the other gun to my brother."

Claude told how Harold then went into a cell block to release Ray before the trio took the turnkey's rings and raided the arsenal, taking a machine gun and some rifles. Seizing the warden the gunmen stole a car from two women in front of the prison and fled northward.

Take Warden's Advice.

"We wanted to get onto a side road as soon as possible," Carrier said, "so we turned off, but the warden said we would stand a better chance of getting away if we went back to the main road.

"So Phil turned back and we went on north. We came on the officers and their first blast hit me. "I don't remember what happened after that."

Accounts of the running gunfight, in which more than 100 shots were exchanged, showed three separate brushes before a combined force of deputy sheriffs, policemen and prison guards were able to halt the fugitives. Claude Carrier was hit in the first exchange and Ray died in the second, the brothers leaving his body on the highway as they continued their flight.

A water hole on the highway proved their undoing as moisture soaked the car's wiring and disabled the auto, permitting the posse to overtake them. Harold Carrier was captured when he attempted to flee, but Claude was unable to leave the machine. Reiley was found fatally wounded in the rear seat.

Today's abortive break was the second at the State prison since August 17, 1922, when G. T. Jameson, then warden, was kidnaped by four convicts, and left bound in a church, while the felons fled. They evaded capture for ten days before one was killed.

Warden Reiley, a native of Iowa, was prominent in the city and served several terms as sheriff and deputy before he was appointed to succeed Jameson nearly three years ago. His widow and four children survive.

Cook Sues to Prove North Pole Claim

The arctic explorer's counsel, H. James Hitching, filed libel suits in New York totaling $125,000 against Encyclopedia Brittanica, Inc.; Viking Press, Inc.; Houghton, Mifflin Co., Jeannette Mirsky, Vilhjalmur Stefansson and Donald B. MacMillan.

"This is the first step in a fight for vindication I have been planning for five years," he said. "I am 70 years old now. Before I die I must clear my good name."

His suits charge books written and published by the defendants discount and ridicule his polar claims.

House Adopts Funds Slash For District

Supply Bill $3,000,000 Short Goes to Senate; Vote 290 to 26.

Roosevelt Upholds Larger Figure; Hints Help in Restoring Total.

By James D. Secrest.

The House yesterday passed the emasculated District appropriations bill over the protests of a handful of members as District officials and civic organizations gained renewed hope the $3,000,000 slashed from the Federal contribution will be restored through the influence of President Roosevelt.

Carrying net appropriations of $42,573,283 and trust funds of $1,435,000, the bill was adopted without amendment and sent to the Senate, where restoration of many items have been promised by the sub-committee headed by Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma. Hearings will be called shortly.

Word the President had indicated he stood by the Budget Bureau estimate of $5,700,000 as against the House sub-committee's figure of $2,700,000 spread rapidly over the Capitol even while the House clerk was reading the bill. Members on both sides predicted Roosevelt's intervention would force the House to accept the budget figure in conference.

The President revealed his attitude at a press conference. When asked for an opinion on the $3,000,000 reduction by Representative Thomas L. Blanton and his sub-committee, Roosevelt called attention to the budget figure and said he stood by it. He then pointed out that Congressional action on the bill had not been completed.

Vote 290 to 26.

The House adopted the District supply bill by a roll call vote of 290 to 26 after Chairman Norton of the House District Committee made a vain attempt to withstand the Blanton-Ditter steam roller, which even cut off debate whenever a member of the District Committee spoke in defense of the District.

Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, pleaded with the House not to accept the sub-committee's rider which prohibits any District employe from engaging in outside work for pay if he draws $2,000 or more from the municipal government.

He pointed out that it will require lawyers in the corporation counsel's office to relinquish their teaching posts in law schools, will deprive teachers from selling articles to magazines, and will eliminate the service of many specialists in the medical field who are now consultants at District clinics and dispensaries.

"You can't get a reputable specialist who will foresake his private practice to work for the District at $2,400," he said.

"The result will be tha. you will penalize the residents of Washington by depriving them of the valuable advice of experts in their specialized professions."

Representative Ditter (Republican), of Pennsylvania, interposed the comment that "there is nothing in the bill to prevent these specialists from giving their time gratuitously in exchange for the use of medical facilities in the District."

Blanton Critical.

Blanton, after moving to close all debate within five minutes, took time to reiterate his criticism of Washington physicians on the District pay roll and to read a list of some of the salaries paid doctors, lawyers and judges.

He placed the blame for the cuts in public health and welfare appropriations squarely on the shoulders of the other members of the sub-committee.

"I refused to vote on any of the health amendments," he said, "because I knew the newspapers would say I was prejudiced if I did."

Dirksen pleaded for one minute to answer him, but Blanton insisted on an immediate vote. When the vote on Dirksen's amendment was taken, several members said "aye," and only Blanton shouted "no." Nevertheless, the presiding chairman, Representative Nelson (Democrat), of Missouri, declared the amendment defeated.

Unable to call for another vote on her amendment to raise the lump sum payment to $5,700,000, Mrs. Norton at first raised a point of no

Airport Report, Facing Defeat, Withdrawn From Angry House

The conference report on the District airport commission bill was withdrawn from the House late yesterday, threatened with defeat because the House was still in an angry mood after quarreling over the District supply bill.

Surprised by unheralded attacks on the report, members of the District Committee at first argued valiantly for the measure and then agreed to a withdrawal of the motion for adoption, upon the request of Majority Leader Bankhead.

The conference report, providing for a nine-man commission to select an airport site, was adopted without opposition by the Senate Thursday. The House last year passed a bill to set up a commission similar to that recommended in the conference report.

The House was in an ugly mood, and the Texas delegation was doing its best to pick the report to peices, with the aid of Representative Taber (Republican), of New York.

Members of the District Committee said after adjournment they will call up the report again some time next week and expressed the belief it will be adopted.

Opponents of the report centered their fire on the authorization of $100,000, which conferees agreed should be charged equally to the Federal and District governments. They insisted that the District should pay the whole share, and then expressed fear that the $90,000 for site options would be lost if Congress did not accept the commission report.

Representative Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, one of the conferees, pointed out that the Federal Government, through the WPA, has already allocated approximately $40,000,000 for airports over the country, and that a WPA grant probably could have been obtained for the District, had not Senator

Corporate Levy Revision Topic Of House Unit

By Robert C. Albright.

Revision of the Administration's corporate tax schedules, to provide a "cushion" for small corporation reserves, was discussed by House tax draftsmen yesterday, as the Treasury released figures on which the President based his revenue proposals.

Treasury estimates pla[illegible] earnings of all profit-making [illegible] tions in 1936 at $8,308,000,000, more than twice what it was in 1933. Of this amount, the Treasury estimated $3,540,000,000 would be paid out in dividends to stockholders, leaving approximately $4,768,000,000 withheld for corporate surplus.

Total statutory net earnings for this year, after allowances for depletion deductions, was put at $7,200,000,000, compared with $2,986,000,000 in 1933, $4,200,000,000 in 1934 and $5,500,000,000 in 1935, a surprising gain.

It is on the basis of these estimates that the President told Congress his plan would yield a net of $620,000,000 annually in new revenue. Representative Fred M. Vinson (Democrat), of Kentucky, is planning to offer an amendment, however, to encourage corporations to set aside small reserves as a safeguard against future depression cycles, by substantially modifying the lower bracket corporate taxes proposed by the Administration.

In sub-committing a list of new tax proposals to the sub-committee yesterday, estimated to yield about $900,000,000, the Treasury, through an unsigned memorandum, made known its opposition to many of the informal proposals, which included revival of the bank check tax, an increased Federal gasoline tax, a sales tax on slot machines, and a special surtax on unearned income.

Administration coolness to higher individual income taxes, the manufacturers excise tax, increaed levies on tobacco, increased taxes on gasoline and admissions and even revival of the bank check tax was indicated.

The memorandum granted that increasing the normal and surtax rates applicable to incomes of $4,000 to $25,000 by further lowering exemptions and credits for dependents would raise substantial revenues, but contended that such a program would "maintain the present escape from high surtaxes that is offered stockholders of corporations which withhold and reinvest rather than distribute their earnings."

It was pointed out that income and profit taxes fell principally on the higher income groups. It further observed that consumption taxes, including processing levies, produced 61 per cent of Government

Brands Practice 'New Inquisition'

Record of Long Distance Phone Calls Revealed at Hearing.

By Felix Bruner.

A charge that every telegram sent and received in Washington during 10 months of last year has been examined by employes of the Federal Communications Commission or of the Senate Lobby Committee was made last night by Jouett Shouse, president of the American Liberty League.

Shouse declared that messages examined included those of Senators and Representatives. It had previously been revealed that the lobby committee, headed by Senator Hugo L. Black (Democrat), Alabama, had examined the Liberty League telegraphic correspondence.

Meanwhile, at the committee hearing, it was revealed that the committee had not only obtained copies of telegrams but that it has obtained records of long-distance calls made to and from Washington, with the dates of the calls, the names of the persons talking and the length of the conversations. Witnesses appearing before the committee were confronted with records of their calls.

Copied Many Messages.

Shouse, who spoke on a Nation-wide radio hookup, made the direct charge that employes of the Communications Commission, which has the legal right to examine telegraphic records for purposes set out in the law, had spent weeks copying messages which were subsequently turned over to the Black committee. Shouse insisted that the law did not give the commission this right.

Declaring that he was acting "on my own responsibility and on the responsibility of the American Liberty League," Shouse made this statement:

"Last fall agents of the Black committee went to the Washington offices of both the Western Union and the Postal Telegraph companies and demanded the right to go through copies of all telegrams on file in these offices.

"Agents of the companies were confused as to what to do. They were afraid to decline to grant the demand and yet they were conscious of the rights of their customers which made compliance impossible. Therefore, they stalled for time until they could confer with their superior officers and get instructions.

Every Message Read.

"Before a decision had been reached, agents of the Federal Communications Commission, accompanied by agents of the Black committee, came to the Washington offices of the two telegraph companies and demanded under the authority of the Communications Commission access to all copies of messages in the said offices.

"Because of the control of the Communications Commission over the affairs of the telegraph companies, representatives of the latter did not dare refuse and this summary demand was complied with. For a space of weeks agents of the Communications Commission, in conjunction with agents of the Black Senatorial committee, went through the entire files of the Washington telegraph offices and made copies of such messages as they desired. The telegraph companies did not know what messages were copied. The copies made were not turned over to the Communications Commission but were turned over to the Black Senatorial committee."

"The New Inquisition."

Shouse said that the only purpose for which the Communications Commission may examine the records of a communications company is "to further an efficient wire and radio communications service." If the commission, he said, can turn confidential telegrams over to the Black committee it can turn such messages over to anyone else.

"If the Black committee," he said, "can seize the telegrams between lawyer and client or between husband and wife it can seize correspondence of an equally confidential character.

"Every telegram sent by any citizen of the United States to anyone in Washington between February 1 and December 1, 1935, has been examined by employes of the Federal Communications Commission or the Black committee. Every telegram

G.O.P. Requests Senate Inquiry In Relief Costs

Steiwer Seeks Study of New Deal Activities; Limit of Fund Asked.

By the Associated Press.

A Republican demand for a Senate investigation of the Administration's work-relief activities was drafted yesterday in one corner of the Capitol, while from another came a Democratic demand that any new relief appropriation be limited to $1,000,000,000.

On still another front, Senator Holt, youthful West Virginia Democrat, asserted he would vote for a Senate investigation if WPA "whitewashed" his charges that political considerations have influenced the West Virginia Work Relief Administration.

Holt made his statement after disclosing that his office desk had been "jimmied" during his recent absence from Washington to conduct his own personal investigation of West Virginia WPA activities.

Police and fingerprint experts, Holt said, had examined the desk, but found no fingerprints. Nothing was taken, he added, because he had removed all valuable papers.

The disclosure was made by Senator Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, that Senator Steiwer (Republican), Oregon, has drafted a resolution calling for a full Senate investigation of all expenditures under the $4,800,000,000 work relief fund voted by Congress last year.

Urges Fund Limit.

On the opposite side of the Capitol, Chairman Buchanan (Democrat), Texas, of the House Appropriations Committee, asserted that new funds for relief should be limited to $1,000,000,000.

"The most I have ever said I would stand for was $1,500,000,000," he said. "And I have always said it ought not to be over $1,000,000,000."

Even as he spoke, President Roosevelt and his aids continued separate studies of the Nation's relief load to see how much will be needed after next July 1.

Mr. Roosevelt told reporters yesterday that at least one more conference would be necessary before a decision could be reached and a message sent to Congress. In some quarters it has been estimated that the amount would be $1,000,000,000 if a six-month program is adopted, or $2,000,000,000 for a full year.

Steiwer declined to comment on his resolution, but it was understood he was withholding its introduction in the belief such an investigation could be made by the committee recently set up at the instance of Senator Byrd (Democrat), Virginia, with Byrd as chairman, to study all Government bureaus and agencies to see if their functions overlap and should be abolished.

The Byrd committee has not yet met. Senator McNary (Republican), Oregon, the minority leader, was named on the committee, but has indicated he would not serve. Steiwer may take his place.

Hopkins' Answer.

Vandenberg previously had asked Harry L. Hopkins, WPA administrator, to look into reports that the Democratic county committee in Indiana County, Pa., was calling on WPA employes for campaign funds.

Hopkins replied to Vandenberg that he could not be responsible for "dumb politicians" who write letters to WPA workers and added:

"The politician who asked for the contributions was told in words of one syllable that our staff was under no obligation to contribute and that their jobs would be fully protected in case they did not contribute."

After Senator Holt first made his charges in the Senate that the West Virginia State Works Progress Administration was being operated for political purposes, Hopkins sent an investigator there to make inquiry.

The investigator, Allen Johnstone, has been on the job two weeks, Holt said, however, that Johnstone was having difficulties because he had no power of subpena nor could he require witnesses to testify under oath.

The West Virginia Senator said he had collected a mass of new evidence to back up his charges and that he would speak in the Senate again Monday or Tuesday.

Soldier Dead, Wife Wounded at Fort

Delaware City, Del., March 6 (AP).—Ellwood J. Hoffman, 38, a private in the seven-man garrison at Fort Delaware, was shot dead there today, and his wife, Mrs. Margaret Hoffman, was seriously wounded.

Hoffman's body and his unconscious wife were found by Capt. George F. Nichols, who rushed from Fort du Pont with a detachment of soldiers after receiving a telephone call from a woman who said she was Mrs. Hoffman, and who told of killing her husband.

Details of the shooting were not available, pending an investigation. Hoffman's body was to be brought to Delaware City, and his wife was hurried to a hospital in Wilmington.

Roosevelt Entry in Primary and Scheduled Speech Show Worry Over Maryland.

By Franklyn Waltman

BALTIMORE, March 6.—President Roosevelt's entry into the Maryland Presidential primary is taken here as an indication that the New Deal high command is worried over the situation in this State and realizes that it has got to fight. This conclusion is supported by the White House announcement Mr. Roosevelt will come here April 13 for a political speech.

With Senator Millard E. Tydings, new leader of Maryland's embattled Democracy, sharply calling for changes in the course of the New Deal in the same breath in which he announces his support of the President, Mr. Roosevelt apparently finds it necessary personally to justify his Administration before the people of this State.

At all events, filing of the President's candidacy in Maryland brings an already bubbling political pot to the boiling point. The real danger to President Roosevelt's prospects in Maryland, however, is not in the impending primary contest, but in the general election next November. None with political experience here expects Henry Breckinridge, whose managers have announced he will seek the Maryland delegation to the Philadelphia convention, to be successful. Few believe he will make even a creditable showing.

This view is based on several fundamental rules of practical politics. In the first place, whatever Democratic revolt exists here against President Roosevelt—and there is such a revolt—is not among political practitioners. It is among the rank and file of Democrats, men and women of high and low station who do not regard the party label as sacred.

The Democratic organization—all factions—is now on record behind President Roosevelt's candidacy. Their declarations lack enthusiasm, but there was nothing else for the Democratic politicians to do. Having declared themselves, they will see that their organizations vote "regular," which is to say for President Roosevelt, in the May primary.

Now in primary fights—when the party organization is together, it usually wins. Its members vote while the rank and file dissenters in large number play golf or otherwise forget it is primary election day. Moreover, Mr. Breckinridge is virtually unknown in Maryland and despite a creditable speech Wednesday night, stirs no enthusiasm here.

Furthermore, many of the dissenting Democrats in this State have made up their minds to vote for the Republican nominee, whoever he may be, and see nothing to be gained by getting hot and bothered over the primary, particularly since President Roosevelt's renomination is certain.

Unless the American Liberty League, the Association for Defense of the Constitution and the Republicans put on a huge and expensive campaign in Maryland, the prospect is that a comparatively light vote will be cast in the primary and President Roosevelt will receive four or five votes to every one cast for Mr. Breckinridge. Such a result would favor Mr. Roosevelt—it would be used by his managers as evidence that hostility to the New Deal in Maryland was just talk. They would argue such a result confirmed Mr. Roosevelt's right to renomination.

Thus if Mr. Breckinridge comes to grips with the President in Maryland, he undoubtedly will be playing into the hands of the Roosevelt-Farley camp and weakening whatever influence Senator Tydings and other Maryland Democrats might be able to exercise at Philadelphia for a modification of obnoxious New Deal policies. It is possible that Mr. Breckinridge may not, after all, actually file his candidacy in Maryland, thus avoiding what now looks like poor strategy.

This is not intended to disparge Mr. Breckinridge's nuisance value within the Democratic Party. In Ohio he might be able to record a substantial vote against President Roosevelt. He might even be able to do so in Maryland, but if he does, then this State definitely may be put down as Republican in November.

Once before a Democrat named Breckinridge played havoc with Democratic harmony, prominently figuring in a split in the party from which it has never fully recovered. He was John C. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, a first cousin of the father of the present Henry Breckinridge. When the Democrats in 1860 split over the slavery issue and at Baltimore nominated Stephen A. Douglas, the Southern bolters selected John C. Breckinridge as their Presidential candidate. His candidacy so split the Democratic vote throughout the country — Breckinridge received six times as many electoral votes as Douglas—that Abraham Lincoln easily was elected.

Frank R. Kent, in his "History of the Democratic Party," explains that it was the "first great split" within the party and he adds that it was "the first time Democrats had deliberately thrown overboard all chance of success in order to fight among themselves over the vital issue of the day instead of fighting the enemy; the first time, but not the last."

Senator Tydings, one of the New Deal's severest critics in the Senate, in his speech announcing he would support President Roosevelt, escaped the dilemma which Al Smith contended confronted Democrats who disagreed with the New Deal: either "take a walk" or don the livery of hypocrisy. The Marylander specifically denied he would either take a walk or support a Republican. He said he would support President Roosevelt, but would fight for a modification of New Deal policies which violated his convictions.

Many observers expected Senator Tydings to don the "livery." He did not. He put on only the running pants. He may still say he wears no man's collar.

Wires Read, Shouse Says

sent out of Washington during those 10 months has been so examined.

"I do not mean telegrams about legislation or public business—I mean that if you, wherever you live, sent any telegram, however private, to anyone in or out of office in Washington, or if you sent any telegram, however private, out of Washington to anyone in the world, on any subject, your telegram has been subject to the prying eyes of the representatives of the New Inquisition."

Senators' Wives Examined.

Shouse said that "of course" the telegrams examined included those of Senators and Representatives—"messages passing between Senators and their wives, messages to and from members of Congress and their confidential political advisers in their home States."

"It should be remembered," he added, "that these confidential messages have been examined by a large corps of employes—not by the Senators on the Black committee themselves, although, of course, they are also available to those Senators."

Shouse said that the Liberty League learned by accident that its messages were examined.

"To any information the committee can get it is more than welcome, but it will be disappointed at the results," he said.

Shouse concluded with an appeal for a "mammoth petition of protest against this monstrous invasion of our fundamental rights," and offered the resources of the league in formulating it.

Public examination into the affairs of the Liberty League is expected to be made by the Black committee soon. It was reported that Shouse, Alfred E. Smith and John J. Raskob may be among the witnesses.

Revealed as Utility Lobbyist.

Among the witnesses yesterday was George Brobeck, legislative counsel for the Veterans of Foreign Wars. The committee revealed that Brobeck had accepted $400 from a utility company while he was also working for the veterans. The committee avoided examination into his work for the veterans.

William J. Hagenah, counsel for the Standard Gas Electric Co., testified he had employed Brobeck, Black brought out that Brobeck's employment had not been reported on the questionnaire sent out by the committee and filled in by the company.

Hagenah insisted Brobeck was not employed as a lobbyist, and Brobeck said he had done nothing in connection with influencing the utility holding company legislation.

Hagenah and Brobeck were not permitted to hear each other's testimony. Brobeck said he had been paid $100 a week but he was not clear as to his duties. He admitted that he probably did not earn the money. Hagenah, after persistent questioning, said he wished to get Brobeck into the employ of the utility company and that he personally had paid him a "retainer" of $100 a week.

Black pulled from his great stack of telegrams a message from Brobeck to Hagenah in which he said he had been "up to the Capitol" and that "things look better for ultimate victory." In the message he asked Hagenah for $500 additional. Both witnesses testified the money was not paid.

The committee also heard testimony that Henry L. Doherty, head of the Cities Service Co., made a profit of $18,000,000 by selling 200,000 shares of company securities in March, 1929. The sale was made, testimony showed, just before employes of the system were "invited" to buy stock on the installment plan. Robert Burns, Cities Service counsel, was the witness.

Herbert Bloomquist, committee investigator, testified that Doherty had used the proceeds of the sale of the stock to buy "principally municipal obligations."

Airport

Representative Jennings Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, who was chairman of the sub-committee on airports last session, pleaded with the members to adopt the report and put an end to the dissension that has prevented constructive airport legislation for a decade.

Speaking in behalf of Federal participation in the expense, he said:

"The rank and file of the people in the District do not use the air lines coming into Washington, but between 50 and 100 members of Congress, and many Federal officials, do utilize them."

Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, urged the House to have confidence in the judgment of its three members, to be named to the commission.

"We'll get on option on a site for you at $35 an acre," he predicted optimistically.

Representative Palmisano, of Maryland, chairman of the conferees, reminded the House it passed the original bill with little opposition, and that the commission would report its findings back to the House.

Nichols said that the final question of which agency shall bear the cost of buying and developing the airport can be determined after the site has been selected, and before the larger appropriation is voted.

Farm Program Support Asked In Wallace Talk

Memphis Meeting Delegate Criticizes Operations in the South.

By the Associated Press.

Memphis, Tenn., March 6.—A tumultuous ovation for Secretary Wallace here today at a regional meeting of farm leaders was followed quickly by an outburst of criticism as an Alabama delegate demanded to know whether or not the South will receive a fair snare of soil-conservation subsidy payments.

Wallace urged the farmers to pledge their faith to the Administration's $500,000,000 soil-conservation program as a long-range plan dedicated to the general welfare of the United States.

The South, Wallace said, might be expected to contribute 12,000,000 to 13,000,000 acres of the diverted soil-depleting crop lands this year. Of this amount, he added, 11,000,000 acres probably would be cotton lands.

Closing his address, Wallace hurried from the platform. W. H. Robertson, a delegate from Auburn, Ala., addressed H. R. Tolley, former assistant AAA administrator, who was attempting to adjourn the session.

Heckler Arises.

"Do you expect the South," Robertson shouted, "to account for 43 per cent of the acres to be shifted to conserving crops this year in return for only 21 per cent of the total amount of subsidy money?"

Reflecting a moment, Tolley replied that statements concerning such a distribution of funds "have not come from this platform."

Wallace declined comment on the Robertson outburst.

Warning the delegates that "efforts will be made in ensuing years to take the soil conservation act away from the farmers," Wallace said:

"I hope you will hold as resolutely onto this act as I formerly said I hoped you would hold onto the processing taxes.

"'Now that the taxes have been taken away, we should turn our attention and interests to the conservation act.

"I think we can satisfactorily defend our act to all parts of the population. I think we can defend it to Wall Street.

Wallace Satisfied.

Memphis, Tenn., March 6 (U.P.).—Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace laughed off a charge tonight that Congress has made him a "financial dictator with a $500,000,000 box of candy to distribute" to farmers under the new Federal soil conservation program.

The Secretary, satisfied "100 per cent" with the Memphis conference of 500 farm leaders, left tonight for Chicago where tomorrow he speaks at a similar conference—one of four called to let the farmers help work out administrative details of the $500,000,000 substitute for the AAA.

Attending the conference on Wallace's invitation, Linder termed the meeting a "camouflage" and a gathering of Federal employes. "I have yet to contact the first man here who isn't a Government employe, connected with the old AAA, or looking for a job under the new set-up."

Linder digressed to make a flat assertion that Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia would be the next President and then "took a walk" out of the conference, claiming agricultural leaders have revealed nothing definite, and farmers were confused.

Illinois Plan Adopted.

Chicago, March 6 (AP).—An important step toward administration of the new soils conservation-subsidy farm program in the corn belt was taken today with committee approval for the "Illinois plan" of benefit payments.

The benefit payment committee of the Regional Conference of Farmers from 12 Midwestern States voted, 12 to 4, for the plan, although the "Ohio" plan won support from Kansas, Indiana and Missouri delegations.

Under the Illinois plan, the acreage to be converted to grasses or legumes—soil rebuilding crops—would be computed for each county. Payments would be made farmers who increased their acreage of the desired crops from the soil-improvement account. Farmers already raising more than the county average of such crops would also receive payments.

Six other committees considering various aspects of the general program labored through the day and planned to hold night sessions. They will report Saturday to the full regional gathering, which is scheduled to be addressed by Wallace.

The medal is voted for conspicuous service, but the exact nature of the service performed by the two archbishops will not be disclosed until the medals are presented, at a dinner here may 24, John M. Dealy, National commander of the Veterans, said.

U. S. to Order 'Secret' Engine For Airplanes

Motor, Called Most Powerful Ever Built, to Be Bought for Army.

The purchase of a new type airplane engine which has been described as "the most powerful in the world" will be announced within a few days by Assistant Secretary of War Woodring, it was learned yesterday.

Although the procurement of the new motors is shrouded in secrecy, it is known that the Army will spend several million dollars acquiring a very large number of the new engine units.

Only Woodring's signature remains to be affixed to the contract that will start a private manufacturer turning out the new and improved power plants. Delivery will be made to the Government as fast as they can be manufactured.

Several Engines Tested.

Several of the new engines have been delivered to Army fliers for testing, it has been learned. The results were so satisfactory that officers assigned to the special trials, conducted at Wright Field, Dayton, Ohio, urged officials at the War Department to "get started" and acquire them without delay.

The purchase of the new engines marks another step in the determined drive of military officials to build up the strength of the flying units of the General Headquarters Air Force.

Many of the new motors will be installed in new ships purchased by War Department officers during December. At that time contracts were awarded for 115 new attack planes and for 90 new bombers. Thirteen of the bombers now being built are of the four-engined Flying Fortress design. These will be powered with the new motors soon to be purchased.

Silent on Details.

Officers at the War Department and at Wright Field steadfastly have refused to discuss flight characteristics of the new engines. In fact, general staff officers have refused to confirm that the big purchase order is pending on Woodring's desk.

However, it has been learned that the manufacturing engineers and Air Corps officers are enthusiastic over the horsepower rating of the new engines, as well as the weight per horsepower and the fuel consumption characteristic.

Design engineers who have completed this project, which now will go into quantity production, are turning their attention to building even bigger engines capable of more than 1,000 rated horsepower.

The current War Department appropriation bill carries funds for the construction next year of more than 500 planes to be assigned to the General Headquarters Air Force as a part of the Air Corps construction program.

Talmadge Program 'Receiver' Is Asked

Atlanta, March 6 (AP).—Ousted Treasurer George B. Hamilton asked a State court today to name a receiver for Gov. Eugene Talmadge's financial "dictatorship" as a member of Congress said reports in Washington were Talmadge may "fire" some members of the Georgia delegation.

Hamilton asked intervention in the suit of three Atlanta banks, which are seeking to determine who is legally entitled to draw funds from the State treasury.

The bank case is scheduled for hearing tomorrow morning before three superior court judges.

Representative Braswell Deen, of Alma, here for a brief visit today, said in a statement:

"It is rumored in Washington that some members of the Georgia delegation in Congress may also be fired by the Governor of Georgia and de facto members appointed in their places."

He added "there are some things worse than being fired and one of them would be playing politics with human misery."

Woman Red Sentenced.

Senate Group Decides Against Hagood Inquiry

Military Affairs Group Rules No Justification For Case Study.

By the Associated Press.

The political tempest arising from removal of Maj. Gen. Johnson Hagood from his command lulled at least temporarily last night as the Senate Military Affairs Committee rejected a proposed investigation and President Roosevelt said he contemplated no further action.

The committee voted, 12 to 2, to accept a sub-committee's unanimous report there was no justification for investigation of Hagood's removal from command of the Eighth Corps Area as proposed in a resolution introduced by Senator Metcalf (Republican), Rhode Island. Hagood had criticized WPA spending policies in testimony before a House sub-committee.

The President, asked at his press conference whether he expected to take further action in the Hagood case, said he did not. He has never commented on Hagood's removal. Senator Metcalf said recently he understood the case had been discussed at a Cabinet meeting before the War Department's order was issued February 21.

The Metcalf resolution, made in the aftermath of Republican condemnation of the Administration for "gagging" critics in a "reign of terror," asked for an investigation to determine whether Hagood's right of free speech had been abridged, who was responsible for his removal, why he was relieved of his command and ordered home, and whether the action was in accordance with usual military discipline.

The sub-committee, composed of Senators Logan (Democrat), Kentucky, Duffy (Democrat), Wisconsin and Carey (Republican), Wyoming, in its report holding criticism of the President by Army officers in violation of the articles of war, said Gen. Hagood had subjected himself to the War Department's disciplinary action.

The full committee report said that while Army officers should be permitted to answer legitimate questions before Congressional committees without subjecting themselves to discipline or punishment, freedom of speech does not mean "a license" to use language which may be interpreted as critical of the President, Congress or other government officials.

The committee added that Gen. Hagood "by other language could have given the committee his opinion it would be much better to expend public funds for housing the Army than for purposes he considered wasteful and unnecessary."

Those voting against the sub-committee report and for an investigation were Senators Austin (Republican), Vermont, and Barbour (Republican) New Jersey.

Ten Democrats and two Republicans voted against an investigation. The Democrats were: Sheppard, Texas, chairman of the full committee; Fletcher, Florida; Coolidge, Massachusetts; Logan, Kentucky; Reynolds, North Carolina; Bachman, Tennessee; Thomas, Utah; Duffy, Wisconsin; Minton, Indiana, and Schwellenbach, Washington.

Meningitis Cases Estimated at 120

Harlan, Ky., March 6 (AP).—Harlan County authorities joined hands with the State today in combating death-dealing disease germs, Spreading from the eastern mountain section, spinal meningitis has taken a toll of about 30 lives in outlying sections of the county.

"Alarming," Dr. W. P. Caudill, State epidemiologist, said late today after a survey. He estimated the number of cases in the county between 110 and 120, mostly children.

All cases and contacts, Dr. Caudill said, have been quarantined strictly but there has been no community quarantine. He said, however, local authorities have accepted State health board recommendations to close theaters and restrict public gatherings through the county pending a further survey.

$1,000,000 Riding Club Will Close Its Doors

New York, March 6 (AP).—The Riding Club, $1,000,000 haven of Manhattan's most distinguished horsemen, will close its doors May 1, it was learned today.

The reason: Too expensive for the present membership.

Sportsmen saw the coming demise of the 55-year-old club as marking the end of an era in New York's sporting society. In its prime, the club had six Vanderbilts on its rolls, and also J. Pierpont Morgan, Andrew Carnegie, August Belmont and John Jacob Astor. The modern trend away from formal park riding, members said, proved the club's downfall.

Blanton Printing Proposal Defeated

Chairman Blanton, of the sub-committee on District appropriations, made an unsuccessful effort in the House yesterday to have printed 2,000 additional copies of the 900-page transcript of the sub-committee's hearings.

After introducing a resolution to authorize the Appropriations Committee to have 2,000 extra copies printed at Government expense, he asked its adoption by unanimous consent in the House. Several objections were voiced.

The chairman's apparent purpose was to obtain extra copies of the hearings on communism to distribute for use against the Sisson bill soon to come before the House. A thousand copies were printed for the sub-committee originally.

Newspapermen, seeking to find the approximate cost of such a run-off, ran against a wall of professed ignorance and fear to talk because it might incur Blanton's displeasure.

Italy Bans Peace If Sanctions Hold

Rome, March 6 (AP).—Some informed Rome sources asserted tonight that Italy would listen to peace terms with Ethiopia "only if sanctions are lifted."

Neither will Italy relinquish any territory which its armies have conquered, these persons said, expressing belief that Premier Mussolini was unlikely to permit the question of territory to enter any peace talks.

In official circles the opinion was voiced that some heavily qualified pronouncement on the League of Nations peace proposals might issue from tomorrow's cabinet session.

New Deal Units Recover Million In Home Frauds

HOLC and FHA Run Down Thousands of Cases of Housing Rackets.

By the Associated Press.

Two New Deal housing agencies yesterday were disclosed to have recovered almost $1,000,000 in a Nation-wide drive against racketeers.

Both the Home Owners Loan Corporation and the Federal Housing Administration have set up special divisions of 20 men each to run down persons who employ dozens of different methods in attempts to "chisel" on either home owners or the Government agencies themselves.

The work is carried on in close co-operation with Department of Justice agents, who aid in tracing offenders.

At the HOLC, officials said that as of March 1 a total of $833,187.07 had been recovered from racketeers. Forty-three persons have been convicted and 226 indicted. Investigations have been undertaken in 5,442 cases, 1,726 of which still are pending.

The investigations arise from false statements by applicants, mortgage holders or others, conspiracies to defraud, unauthorized solicitation of fees, embezzlement or theft by corporation employes, depredation of property mortgaged to the HOLC and bribery.

Five employes have been indicted on embezzlement or theft charges, it was said, and about a dozen cases of bribery have been investigated.

Reporting they had recovered "several hundred thousand dollars," FHA officials said that most racketeering cases have arisen in large centers of population.

Several hundred cases are under investigation involving unauthorized collections, impersonation of FHA agents, conspiracy and false representations to home owners.

Akron's Supply Of Milk Halted By Big Dealers

By the Associated Press.

Akron, Ohio, March 6.—Two Summit County milk producers' associations shut off approximately 85 per cent of consumer milk deliveries in Akron today as Prosecutor Herman E. Werner threatened that "anyone who interferes with milk deliveries will face guns."

"The order will be to shoot to kill," Werner told representatives of producers, dairy operators and the milk drivers union. "If necessary vigilantes will be organized."

C. B. Alexander, Akron Pure Milk Co. president, said no acute shortage developed immediately, since consumers had stocked refrigerators.

J. I. Shafer, president of the Summit County Producers Association, said his group and the Independent Producers' Association obtained the co-operation of most Akron dairies to curtail deliveries. He claimed 15 per cent of the normal milk supply was delivered by dairies purchasing from producers not affiliated with either organziation.

This was done, Shafer said, to focus official attention on a milk drivers' union strike at the Averill dairy plant to bring it to a speedy conclusion. The union, he said, ignored a producers' utlimatum last night to dissolve a blockade of the Averill plant, where pickets brought operations to a stop yesterday.

He said hospitals and other institutions received their regular deliveries.

The milk controversy became the paramount issue among four labor disputes which have thrown approximately 16,000 persons out of work.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. plants' strike, affecting more than 14,000 employes, is in its eighteenth day.

Negotiations continued among representatives of the Chemical Workers Union and the Columbia Cremical Co., in suburban Barberton, where approximately 900 are idle.

Pickets of the United Match Workers Union remained on duty at the Palmer Match Co. plant, where union spokesmen claim 450 workers have been locked out.

Ship Parley Agrees On Guns, Tonnage

London, March 6 (AP).—The International Naval Conference made a sudden burst of progress today when its technical committee adopted the American formula for battleship limitations.

In conference circles, the opinion was expressed that Japan and Italy would accept the plan.

The limitations continue the 35,000-ton maximum for battleships, but cut the maximum size of their guns from 16 to 14 inches if the signatories of the Washington Treaty agree. The signatories were the United States, Great Britain, Japan, France and Italy, and only Japan is not represented at this conference, her delegates having left.

Originally the American delegation had agreed to a 14-inch maximum for battleship guns.

Miami Police to Close All Gambling Houses

Miami Beach, Fla., March 6 (AP).—The whirr of roulette wheels and the click of rolling dice were ordered silenced both in elaborate night clubs and smaller establishments today as Police Chief H. V. Yocum placed a deadline tomorrow on all gambling operations. Raiding squads will be detailed to enforce the edict, and additional officers will be placed on special duty, if necessary.

While police have made almost daily arrests on gambling charges, fining convicted operators $500 each, it was known that persons attending night clubs could find almost every type of gambling apparatus in operation. In Miami a similar order banning all gambling operations has been issued by Detective Chief L. O. Scarboro.

Police in Brazil Hold 2 English WomeninHotel

By the Associated Press.

Rio de Janeiro, March 6.—Two titled Englishwomen, Viscountess Hastings and Lady Marian Cameron, declared in an interview at their hotel today they had been held there incommunicado since yesterday.

Richard Gavin Freeman, a young man who they said accompanied them from Great Britain to Brazil, was held at police headquarters.

Authorities said that the three disrespected the laws and customs of Brazil from the moment of their debarkation from the ship Arlanza, February 24, and that they were arrested after repeated warnings.

Seraphim Braga, chief of the social section of the police, said Freeman's baggage contained documents which seemed to bear on Brazilian communism. Lady Cameron asserted Freeman was placed in jail the day they arrived and finally was released with the aid of the British embassy and consulate general, but was again arrested.

The interview was given in the presence of Manoel Dos Santos Pereria, a special representative of Capt. Filinto Mueller, chief of police.

Viscountess Hastings declared the trio came to Brazil on diverse writing assignments. They were taken before Mueller the day they landed, she said.

To the police chief's questions, Viscountess Hastings went on:

"We answered we had come to gather material for writing. We did not claim to be members of the Communist Party of England, of course."

Widow, 2 Daughters Held in Shooting

Welch, W. Va., March 6 (AP).—Prosecutor Wilson Anderson charged a widow and her two daughters today with slaying the woman's husband, John D. Kennedy, found shot to death at their home at Bradshaw.

Mrs. Kennedy, Mrs. Mary Kennedy Coleman, and Ruth Kennedy, 17, each posted $5,000 bond for a hearing March 20.

Anderson said State troopers told him Kennedy, a member of the House of Delegates in 1929, died of revolver wounds late last night.

"Kennedy was shot while intoxicated," the prosecutor said.

Dempster Named Head Of NYA for Maryland

Baltimore, March 6 (AP).—Wyland N. Dempster, former registrar at the Johns Hopkins University, has been appointed State director for Maryland under the National Youth Administration, it was announced today.

Father Directs 'Ad' To Boy's Kidnaper

Medfield, Mass., March 6 (AP).—A Medfield farmer, Silas Tibbetts, resorted to advertising today in "a last desperate attempt" to reach persons he said he believed were holding his 3-year-old son, Dale.

The father's appeal, inserted in a Boston paper, read:

"If person or persons holding child missing since January 15 wish to return him home, write to C. R. L.-E. W., Harding, Mass., for information. All mail strictly confidential."

Harding is a sub-station of the Medfield postoffice.

The father declared his belief Dale had not died in woods or swamps in this vicinity, over which searchers walked for days in a vain hunt.

Ex-Editor of Hungarian Paper to Be Deported

Cleveland, March 6 (AP).—Uj Eldore, Hungarian daily newspaper here, received notification today that Emil Gardos, former editor of the paper, must be deported as an alien Communist.

According to final ruling of the Department of Labor, Gardos has his choice of being sent to his birthplace in Rumania or going at his own expense to any country not adjacent to the United States, the paper said. Friends said he expected to appeal the ruling in Federal court in New York.

Gardos came to the United States in 1922 and became a citizen in 1928. The Government moved to annul his citizenship in 1930 on the ground that he acted with mental reservations because of professed communism. He once ran for Congress on the Communist ticket in Milwaukee.

Fear of Nazis Shakes Spy Trial Defendant

London, March 6 (AP).—Dr. Hermann Gortz quailed under the shadow of Nazi higher-ups today at his trial for violating the British official secrets act, and declared he dared not answer questions concerning them because he might be "tried for high treason in Germany."

Husband Held After Slayings Of Two Women

By the Associated Press.

Jacksonvlile, Fla., March 6.—Slashed and almost nude bodies of two women were found in Nassau Creek near here today. Police arrested Mark C. Powell, husband and son-in-law of the victims, on a murder charge.

They said records showed Powell, 49, had served prison sentences for slayings in Florida and in Alabama.

Powell told officers the women had been missing since they left home to attend a motion picture Sunday.

Two fishermen found the bodies. The abdomen of each had been slit. Both had head injuries.

Head Blows Fatal.

Dr. R. R. Killinger, medical examiner, said the head wounds apparently had been caused by hammer blows which would have been fatal. He said the abdomens were slashed after the head injuries.

The body of Mrs. Powell, 44, was stripped. That of her mother, Mrs. Lou E. Speers, 65, was clad only in a corset and stockings.

Officers quoted Powell as saying his wife and her mother wore diamond rings when they left home. Mrs. Speers, he said, had about $200 in cash.

A pocketbook identified as Mrs. Speers' was found empty in a nearby creek. The creek was drained, but nothing else found.

Blood Stains Analyzed.

Police started analysis of blood stains they said were found in Powell's automobile and on the kitchen floor at his home.

Powell was convicted here in 1926 of murder in the street slaying of W. C. Coles, prominent attorney and once city council member. He was sentenced to life, but received a conditional pardon in 1929. His citizenship was restored in 1931.

Officers said Powell had been pardoned in Alabama in 1914 after serving a short portion of a ten-year sentence for second degree murder.

Poland Removes Ban On Methodist Society

Warsaw, March 6 (AP).—The Polish government today lifted a suspension on the American Methodist Society in this country, acknowledging the ban was applied through a "misunderstanding."

The society, supported by the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of the United States, was suspended last month after Polish authorities had gone over the organization's books and said they found "certain irregularities," such as transfer of funds to America without "sufficient explanation."

A school and mission in Warsaw and an orphanage outside the city were affected by the order.

'Dunkerque' Launched.

Brest, France, March 6 (AP).—The Dunkerque, France's first 26,500-ton cruiser, was launched today. It is expected to have a speed of 30 knots and to carry a crew of 1,300. Trial runs begin in June.

Deadline Near, Hoffman Spurs Kidnap Inquiry

Search for Clews Spreads; Fisher Has Several Moves in View.

By the Associated Press.

Trenton, N. J., March 6 (AP).—Gov. Harold G. Hoffman's investigators, spurred by his announcement he has only until March 12 to sign a second reprieve for Bruno Richard Hauptmann, today intensified search for new evidence in the Lindbergh baby kidnap-slaying.

At the same time, Hauptmann's chief counsel, C. Lloyd Fisher, said the defense had several courses in view should nothing develop before Thursday to make a reprieve likely. The Governor has said that "as matters sand now" there will be no new reprieve.

Hauptmann is under sentence to die the week of March 30.

Still Interested in "Jafsie."

The Governor's press aid, William S. Conklin, said Hoffman is still interested in activities of Dr. John F. (Jafsie Condon, ransom emissary, and is seeking details of an interview Condon had with a Miami (Fla.) prisoner in December, 1934.

Conklin said numerous offers of assistance in the search for clews to a "complete solution" of the crime have extended the investigation to many sections of the country and into foreign lands as well. These people are not official investigators. Many are acting without knowledge of the Governor.

Unconfirmed reports persisted representatives of Hoffman were on their way to Cuba and Germany.

Report From Hicks.

The Governor recently received from Robert Hicks, Washington criminologist, a Cuban police report on a letter offering to dispose of "hot" money.

Dr. Condon, now in Panama, interviewed the Florida prisoner, Sam Garelick, serving a life sentence for kidnaping, on December 16, 1934, 17 days before Hauptmann went on trial.

The Governor, in a telegram to Sheriff D. C. Coleman, of Miami, said he understood the purpose of the Bronx educator's visit was to try to identify Garelick as the person to whom he paid the $50,000 ransom. At the trial Condon identified Hauptmann as the man.

Conklin said the Governor thought the interview with Garelick indicated Jafsie believed more than one person was involved.

Strike by 3,000 Ended in Illinois

Harrisburg, Ill., March 6 (AP).—Saline County's "Protest holiday" called by the Progressive Miners of America because a colliery was reopened here with workers from a rival union, ended late today without attaining its objective.

More than 3,000 workers in nine Progressive-manned mines in this center of bitter mine strife in past years were ordered to return to work. They have been idle for two days and this morning peacefully picketed Peabody No. 43 here at which work began Monday with United Mine Workers of America employed.

The Peabody company made no concessions.

There was no violence in contrast to a riot here October 5, 1933, in which a score of persons were injured in a reopening attempt.

An attempt to shut down all business in the county failed. After a partial closing Thursday, the Retail Merchants Association of Harrisburg voted last night to reopen today.

Milwaukee Newsmen Curbed on Picketing

Milwaukee, March 6 (AP).—Circuit Judge Charles L. Aarons granted a permanent injunction today against the Milwaukee Newspaper Guild and striking editorial employes of the Wisconsin News to restrain them from continuing a secondary boycott by picketing advertisers.

The Wisconsin News had petitioned for the order on grounds such picketing was illegal.

Judge Aarons ruled that signs such as "Don't Patronize Stores Advertising in the Wisconsin News" and "Don't Patronize the Store Until It Stops Advertising in the News," were unlawful and could not be carried in front of stores advertising in the News.

He declared, however, that strike pickets may parade on any street and carry signs calling attention to the strike.

Yugoslavs See Plot in Attempt To Kill Premier

Police Seize 4 After Deputy Fires at Leader During Chamber Session.

By the Associated Press.

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, March 6.—Police charged tonight that a spectacular attempt to kill Premier Milan Stoyadinovich in the Yugoslav Chamber of Deputies was the culmination of a political conspiracy.

The premier ducked under the desk of the speaker's rostrum as Darian Arnantovich, the Macedonian deputy, fired four pistol shots at him. One of the bullets struck the railing of the diplomatic gallery, where Charles S. Wilson, United States Minister to Yugoslavia, sat with other foreign representatives.

Officers said they were convinced that Arnantovich was one of a faction determined to use the premier's assassination as a means of achieving its political goal.

Moving swiftly after the assault, police raided the clubhouse of the Yugoslav National Party, arrested four opposition deputies and issued warrants for several more.

Arnantovich was seized and taken to a cell, where police said he was recovering from the effects of a long period of drinking. The deputy was reported officially to have visited a number of night clubs last night with two men known for their bitter hostility toward the premier.

Returns to Work.

After a half hour's interruption caused by the attack, the premier—his political prestige apparently heightened—continued his discussion of the budget and foreign affairs, which was interrupted by the shooting.

The incident was the latest of many disorderly scenes in the Yugoslav Chamber. On several occasions a group of about 100 opposition deputies have stopped proceedings by slamming the tops of their desks, throwing ink bottles and even attacking government deputies with their fists.

Today, many of the opposition members had decided not to take their places on the floor of the Chamber. Arnantovich, one of them, watched the proceedings from the press gallery.

As the premier started speaking, Arnantovich interrupted him with shouted questions. Finally Stoyadinovich invited him to the floor and he took a seat near the speaker's rostrum.

Arnantovich drew a pistol, but a deputy managed to strike his arm and the shots, fired in quick succession, went wild. Several women in the diplomatic gallery screamed.

Another outbreak threatened after quiet had been restored. An opposition deputy tried to congratulate the premier on his escape, but he was interrupted by hoots from other opposition deputies. Stoyadinovich silenced the disturbance and proceeded to explain that Yugoslavia remains true to the League of Nations and will observe its obligations as a member of the Little Entente.

The parliamentary opposition has been bitter over the premier's refusal to order new elections and revise the election law.

The present Parliament was elected last May, when Bogoljur Yevtich was premier, and a majority are considered followers of Yevtich. They subsequently decided to support Sloyadinovich, but the opposition contends that few would hold their seats if a new election were held.

25 Children Escape As Bus Falls 75 F...

Montrose, Colo., March 6 (AP).—A school bus rolled down a 75-foot cliff today, scattering 25 children over the hillside but none was killed.

Two small girls riding beside Driver Wesley Frasier suffered minor injuries.

Frasier said something attracted his attention for a moment and before he realized the bus plunged over the cliff. It dropped several feet and then rolled. The top was demolished.

pendent agreements with individual owners.

Strikers returned to their jobs immediately after the three-year contract was signed. Among the buildings covered were the Produce Center, the Fifth Avenue Hotel and the Essex House.

Lewis Wires Best Wishes.

The Prudence Co. was not a member of the Realty Advisory Board, representing most of the 1,954 other buildings affected by the strike. Spokesmen for the board reiterated their determination not to treat with the union on the closed shop issue.

Meanwhile the union prepared to extend the strike to skyscraper office buildings and apartment houses in the midtown Grand Central zone.

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, wired union leaders that his organization extended "best wishes for success in this splendid fight for industrial freedom."

Paul N. Coulcher, secretary-treasurer of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes' Union, announced that 5,000 kitchen and dining room workers in 100 hotels would go on the picket line in support of the service workers' strike.

At the same time the walkout threateed to spread to Newark, N. J., next week. Robert Everitt, New Jersey representative of the building service union, said between 300 and 350 workers in 40 downtown Newark office buildings would strike Monday unless they received wage increases.

In addition to the hotel district, Manhattan strike leaders pressed their efforts to tie up service in the Washington Heights and Harlem areas.

The union claimed 2,500 workers had quit their jobs in 600 Harlem buildings. No attempt was made to estimate the extent of the walkout in Washington Heights.

Chris Houlihan, head of the union's hotel division, said employes might be called out of the Waldorf-Astoria tomorrow.

Despite a marked drop in disorders, police continued on the alert, with 2,401 patrolmen and 113 sergeants assigned to special duty.

The National Guard has several plans of action ready in case of emergency, it became known, but Adj. Gen. Walter G. Robinson said the possibility of their being used appeared "very remote."

Strike headquarters awaited the arrival of international union officers from Chicago bearing "unlimited funds" for the fight.

John Herling, who said he was a Washington newspaper man, was fined $5 in a Yorkville court on a charge of being disorderly yesterday following his arrest with a group of strike pickets in front of a midtown New York office building.

Big Sums Held Lost in Liquor Tax Collections

By the Associated Press.

Testimony—immediately challenged by the Treasury—that the Government and States are losing hundreds of millions of dollars in taxes, and that people are forced to pay exorbitant prices through the present method of collecting liquor taxes, was received yesterday by a Senate Finance sub-committee.

Eugene Greenhut, of New York, a member of the executive council of the National Civic Federation, told the committee an exhaustive study by his organization showed 625,000,000 one-penny stamps certifying tax payment had gotten into circulation in excess of needs, and said many undoubtedly were used to avoid taxes.

He advocated the Copeland bill to make the retailer pay liquor taxes, instead of the distiller and wholesaler, and requiring a stamp costing the full amount of the tax. He said it would reduce illicit traffic, save $360,000,000 annually in revenues to Federal and State Governments, reduce retail prices from 25 to 50 per cent, and make sellers and buyers of nontaxed liquor equally guilty.

Stewart Berkshire, deputy collector of internal revenue, opposed the bill, and questioned Greenhut's testimony. He read reports from regional supervisors, saying the stamp problem was "minor" and virtually "nonexistent."

He said it would take 200,000 men to inspect the 225,000 retail outlets, which Greenhut asserted were largely responsible today for traffic in illicit and non-taxed liquor, as against 4,500 employes now.

Over 100,000 inspections in the last six months, he said, had shown less than 15 per cent violations by retailers. Less than half of these were due to operation without occupational license, he said, and less than one-half of 1 per cent arose from spurious labels or stamps.

Greenhut said 50 per cent of liquor consumption today was of non-taxed brands. He asserted that bootlegging and tax-evasion were on the increase, and that still seizures had climbed 50 per cent in 1935 over 1934.

B, S and W Stumps Chief Justice Hughes

By the Associated Press.

Chief Justice Hughes, familiar with AAA, NRA, TVA and other alphabetical combinations, yesterday halted a Supreme Court lawyer to find out about "B, S and W."

Justin C. Daspit, fast-talking Louisiana Special Assistant Attorney General, was defending validity of a State oil tax and the deductions allowed.

He rattled off the "B, S and W" phrase several times.

Plays, Services To Mark Jewish Feast of Purim

Synagogues to Commemorate Saving of Israelites by Queen Esther.

Washington Jews will celebrate the Feast of Purim tonight and tomorrow afternoon, with special religious services and plays in local synagogues.

The festival, also known as the Feast of Lots, commemorates the saving of the Jewish people in Persia from the wrath of the King's minister, by Queen Esther, herself a Jew, as told in the Book of Esther.

Special services will be conducted tonight in all orthodox synagogues. These will be followed with plays and parties tomorrow.

At the Southeast Hebrew Congregation, the scroll of the Book of Esther will be read after which the children of the Hebrew School will present an English-Hebrew play. There will be a party, with gifts to be distributed to the poor.

Rabbi Zemach Green, of the Congregation Ohev Sholom, will broadcast over station WOL from 9 to 9:15 p. m. A masquerade party will be held at the Washington Hebrew Congregation.

According to the Biblical story, Ahasuerus, King of Persia, displeased at the disobedience of his wife, divorced her and married Esther, cousin of Mordecai, one of the leading Jews in the kingdom. Between Mordecai and Haman, a favorite general, a deadly feud existed. When Haman was appointed prime minister, he plotted to rid himself of Mordecai, by convincing the King that he should issue an edict for the annihilation of all Jews in his domain.

Learning of this edict, Mordecai pleaded with Esther to intercede on behalf of her people. At first she demurred, as the King did not know she was a Jewess. Risking death, Esther went to the King, invited him to a feast, and there told him the story of Haman's persecution of the Jews. The King ordered Haman hanged.

THE WILSON DAM AT MUSCLE SHOALS.
The Supreme Court has upheld the Government's contention that the current produced at this dam may be sold in competition with private power. The practical effect of this and other similar decisions, however, depends primarily upon whether markets can be found for such additional power.

Announcement

The Journal of Commerce announces the publication of what it believes to be the one adequate source that will accurately answer all of these questions—THE PUBLIC UTILITY ATLAS OF 1936. This ATLAS contains 32 individual maps, showing the properties of every electric utility in every State, as well as a wealth of economic and engineering data.

1. The limits to which the Supreme Court confined its decision, and the exact area that will be affected by this decision, can be instantly obtained from a reference to the PUBLIC UTILITY ATLAS OF 1936.

2. The ability of any section of the country to absorb power will be determined by the DENSITY AND DISTRIBUTION OF THE POPULATION within such an area.

3. Fourteen major utility companies will be affected to a greater or lesser degree by the full development of the Tennessee Valley. Their names and the extent to which they will be affected can be determined readily from a reference to the ATLAS.

4. The extent to which the operating companies within this area tap the major markets can be readily seen from the ATLAS.

5. The extent to which privately owned power plants can be affected will be determined by the relationship of such plants to proposed Government projects, and the construction of transmission lines from them.

6. The ability of T. V. A. economically to transfer this power to the load center may be largely determined by the already existing interconnections between it and the private companies, and between the private companies themselves.

FIELD SURVEY

We believe that no other medium short of an actual engineering field survey can possibly answer completely the questions that are raised here. Designed to take the place of such field surveys for the larger financial institutions, the maps contained in the PUBLIC UTILITY ATLAS were a supplement to confidential and technical analyses prepared by Institutional Utility Service. It was in response to an insistent demand on the part of those interested in utility problems that Institutional Utility Service decided to publish their entire series of maps under our sponsorship in the form of the PUBLIC UTILITY ATLAS.

WHAT DO THESE MAPS SHOW?

DENSITY OF POPULATION: Through a system of color shading DENSITIES OF POPULATION are shown for every State in the United States, in relation to the electric utility physical plant.

GENERATING PLANTS: Their location, ownership and capacity; pictorial representation shows whether hydro or steam; distance from territory served; Government projects affecting each.

TRANSMISSION LINES: High tension and low tension tie-ins; to what extent lines must be built for interconnection of various load centers and their power plants.

INTERCONNECTIONS: Special symbol for company interconnections, both within each State and across State boundaries.

DISTRIBUTION: Relative size of type used shows the population of every city and town of over 5,000, and certain towns of 2,500 or more. Connections lines show how each is supplied with power, by whom, and distance from power plant rendering service.

A limited first edition of the PUBLIC UTILITY ATLAS now available. Subscriptions will be filled in the order of their receipt.

Fill in the coupon below and mail it to us and we will send you, free of charge, a booklet descriptive of the PUBLIC UTILITY ATLAS OF 1936, containing two miniature maps drawn to scale of the States of California and Eastern Pennsylvania for your inspection.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation presents Alice Ehlers in a recital of harpsichord music at the Library of Congress Friday afternoon. Program: "The Bells" (William Byrd), Variations on a Passamezzo (Samuel Scheidt), Fugue on the Magnificat (Johann Pachelbel), Concerto in the Italian style (J. S. Bach), Sonata: "The Combat Between David and Goliath" (Johann Kuhnau), "Les Vendangeuses," "La Bandoline" (Francois Couperin), "La Poule," "Le Rappel des Oiseaux" (J. P. Rameau), Two Sonatas (Domenico Scarlatti).

An admirable player of the harpsichord, with a precisely clear technique and a nice judgment in the use of registrations, Miss Ehlers delighted a large audience with her performance of a program well sprinkled with old novelties. There was charm in this excursion into the past, which ranged from the beginning of the seventeenth century to the middle of the eighteenth in time and through England, France and Germany in space.

If space and time are different aspects of the same thing, as mystics tell us, then one need not wonder that the infrequent sound of the harpsichord can magically carry us back to its former European kingdom, just as the singing of a caged bulbul can transport us in imagination to a Persian garden within sight of the snows of Demavend. Such is the evocatory power of a mechanism made of keys, jacks, quills and strings. For the harpsichord was in its epoch the aristocrat of instruments and a dweller in palaces.

The logical process of musical evolution was manifest in William Byrd's "The Bells," a prototype of present-day piano pieces imitating the clanger of chimes. As one listened to it, one realized at once that it was the remote sire of Rakhmaninov's C sharp minor prelude. The line of descent is long, but it runs straight from merry England to melancholy Russia.

Whenever I hear the Bach "Italian" concerto on a harpsichord, I find it much more satisfactory than the transmogrified arrangement for piano. The resonance of a concert grand builds the music into a grandiose structure out of proportion to the original work, as though a cottage had swelled into a temple. Some delicate essence in the tones has been destroyed, color has replaced fragrance, and thunder drowns the voice of fragile beauty.

Miss Ehlers disturbed the chronological order of her program only once, when she placed the "Italian" concerto before Kuhnau's Bibilical sonata. Kuhnau was the immediate predecessor of Bach as cantor at the Thomaskirche. Though the claim may be disputed, many musicologists call him the inventor of program music because of his six sonatas, which he titled "Musical Representation of Some Bibical Stories."

The naivete of the descriptive effects is the principal charm of the David and Goliath sonata, which is the one of the set most frequently played. One cannot help smiling at the chords supposed to be the stamping of the Philistine giant and the airy run which simulates the flight of the stone from David's sling. It would be interesting to hear some of the other sonatas, say "Jacob's Wedding" or "David's Cure of Saul," which should be equally diverting.

Symphony's Student Concerts Stir Youths' Interest in Music

'The Way Hans Kindler Does It' Evokes Sharp Response From Boys and Girls Who Are Learning to Play; Attendance Is Large.

"Now this is the way Hans Kindler does it."

The remark was overheard at St. Gabriel's Parochial School the other day, as a young student, recently returned from one of the National Symphony student concerts in Central High School, picked up his violin. Then he showed his fellow musicians how the piece should sound—according to Hans Kindler, the National Symphony conductor.

That's what symphony concerts—ten of which are being given this year for boys and girls in school—do for student instrumentalists. Any pupil can go to the concerts and enjoy the music, but those who are learning to play a violin, or a horn, are the closest observers of Hans Kindler's every move.

And because they are such eager spectators, teachers and principals throughout the city have made every effort to get their young charges to the concerts. St. Gabriel's school is one of the many parochial centers to support the National Symphony this season. Sister Rosaline, who is head of the school, has had charge of the pupil groups from St. Gabriel's, and yesterday she reported the school had been represented by large numbers at each of the concerts so far given.

The more concerts the children attend, the more eager they are for the next one, teachers pointed out.

"Boys and girls take to symphony music like they do to stories that are told to them," one instructor observed. "They're always ready for a good one. And of course they like to hear something they like, over and over. And whenever the symphony plays a piece that strikes their fancy, it will stay with them."

Music teachers are the most grateful for the symphony concerts. Attending the students' concerts stimulates interest in orchestra and glee club practice, and sometimes a talented boy or girl is so inspired that he begins a career in music, the teachers say.

The students' concerts have been an integral part of the National Symphony seasons since the orchestra was founded in 1931. The present campaign to raise $100,000 for another season, if successful, will make possible more student concerts next year.

Tax Fee Reduction Asked in Maryland

Montgomery County hucksters and bakers, who for more than a year have opposed the license tax as too high, found a champion yesterday in Senator Stedman Prescott who introduced a bill into the State Legislature in session at Annapolis to lower the fee from $100 to $50.

Several bakery companies operating in the county have permitted their drivers to be arrested for nonpayment of the tax in order to test its validity. Each time, however, the court ruled that the tax had to be paid.

Prescott's bill was referred to a special committee consisting of himself, and Senators Ridgley P. Melvin, of Anne Arundel County, and Richard S. Dodson, of Talbot County.

Strange Cattle Malady.

Parsons, W. Va., March 6.—Two dozen cattle belonging to Lindsey Reed, Canaan Valley farmer residing near Davis, have died in the last few days, as the result of an undiagnosed malady which has stricken other herds in that part of Tucker County. A quarantine has been established, in an effort to check the disease.

Locarno Showdown Due

night to get Premier Mussolini to settle his quarrel with the League of Nations so as to leave her hands free to deal with Germany.

Bound by her pledge to assist Great Britain if the Italo-Ethiopian war spreads to Europe, France waited in vain on the eve of Hitler's expected denouncement of the Locarno treaty for a similar promise from London.

Foreign Minister Pierre-Etienne Flandin, in a secret meeting with the Italian ambassador, Vittorio Cerruti, expressed fear, informed sources said, that if Italy includes special conditions in her reply to the League's peace appeal it will be turned down as incompatible with "dignity" of the Covenant.

French newspapers were instructed not even to mention Cerruti visited the Quai d'Orsay.

Flandin had warned the cabinet that there might be "grave consequences" if Germany breaks the Locarno pact unless Great Britain pledges France unrestricted military support.

Britain Temporizes.

London, March 6 (AP).—Great Britain, pressed by France for assurances of support against possible German aggression, temporized today by moving to obtain the real facts in Berlin and Rome as to whether Germany and Italy intend to denounce the Locarno Treaty.

Britain was represented by informed persons as reluctant to take any step which would give Germany an excuse for disavowing the pact—especially as Britain has seen no overt act committed by Germany.

The British, reliable sources said, probably will continue to play for time.

The British ambassadors at Rome and Berlin, it was stated in an informed quarter, have been instructed to make reports on the Locarno situation, but it was indicated authoritatively they have not been ordered to approach Reichsfuehrer Hitler and Premier Mussolini directly.

Definite Stand Asked.

These instructions were issued, it was understood, after French Foreign Minister Flandin asked Britain to outline definitely what its position would be if Germany and Italy abrogated the pact.

The prime factors on which Britain wants information, it was said reliably, are whether Italy will accept the League of Nations' proposal that the Italo-Ethiopian dispute be settled under League auspices; what Italy will do if more sanctions are voted against her; and what Germany's plans are if Italy retaliates against sanctions.

Italians Raze Native City

over Addis Ababa today gave the capital its first sight of an Italian plane.

Britain Orders Protest.

London, March 6 (AP).—Great Britain ordered its ambassador to Rome today to protest strongly the alleged bombing of a British Red Cross unit in Ethiopia by Italian planes.

Sir Eric Drummond, British ambassador, was instructed to urge Premier Mussolini's government to press an investigation and to order military leaders at the front to make certain such an incident did not occur again.

Government officials asserted they had no official word of Addis Ababa reports that Maj. G. A. Burgoyne had been killed.

Plain Indignation.

There was plain indignation in official quarters. An authoritative source near the government asserted: "It is most obvious that the Italians knew what the unit was."

He said the British Embassy in Rome had been instructed late in January to tell the Italian government that Melley's unit was moving in the sector where it was bombed.

Britain's air force will ask Parliament to increase its 1936 budget by £13,015,000 (about $65,000,000) over last year because of special expenditures "in connection with the Italo-Ethiopian dispute," it was announced officially today.

$195,000,000 for Air Force.

Viscount Swinton, secretary for air, said an appropriation of £39,000,000 (about $195,000,000) will be sought.

The air secretary's memoranda pointed out his estimates did not take into account requests to be made for funds to carry on the expansion program outlined this week in a "white paper."

He outlined plans for completing 1,500 first line aircraft in 123 squadrons and for raising the air force personnel to 50,000 officers and men.

Mr. Hull On Stabilization.

In his Baltimore address Secretary Hull made an able defense of the Administration more effective by forthright advocacy of currency stabilization and strong emphasis upon the importance of a balanced budget.

The Secretary of State offered a familiar but by no means conclusive excuse for dollar devaluation, alleging that the alternative would have been continued deflation, contraction of credit and loss of our gold supplies. But this debatable thesis was of secondary importance to his vigorous plea for international currency stabilization. Indeed, he virtually extended an invitation to other countries to enter into a discussion of the question without delay.

Mr. Hull of course realizes that stabilization agreements presuppose stable domestic currencies and an end to those unbalanced budgets which are an ever-present threat to such stability. Hence it is logical that he should anxiously anticipate the time when the Federal budget will be balanced, and the spendthrift policies that he has been constrained to defend will be abandoned. Then a safe foundation will be provided, so far as the United States is concerned, for urging other countries to join in a stabilization agreement to further an expansion of foreign trade and help to restore lost markets. The United States will not be culpable if this development is unnecessarily postponed.

Indeed the State Department has made notable progress toward breaking the ice through its reciprocal trade-agreements policy. But, as Secretary Hull says, "Production and the conduct of trade in this country and abroad require for their assurance that the value of the currency of each country shall not widely fluctuate in terms of other currencies." Without stabilization, as no one recognizes better than Mr. Hull, the structure he is building has no firm foundation.

Sweet Land Of Liberty.

It is a curious commentary on our fancied devotion to the principle of free speech that a former Kansas accountant should provoke reams of Congressional debate, columns of newspaper display and at least one street demonstration by discussing an ancient political theory for fifteen minutes over the air. Yet all this occurred when Earl Browder, general secretary of the Communist Party in the United States, spoke over a coast-to-coast network Thursday evening.

The Columbia Broadcasting System is to be congratulated for its fair-mindedness and good Americanism in putting its facilities at Mr. Browder's disposal. Consistency now requires that the company restrict further free radio time to Communist spokesmen in proportion to their strength throughout the country. Which means that the comrade will not be rushed in preparing his next plea over the airways.

As for the speech itself, it must have pleased the children of his unseen radio audience particularly. Not merely for its content, but also because the broadcast was such an excellent way to satisfy, at least locally, curiosity naturally inflamed by the Fascist ban on balanced discussion of the subject in the schools.

Can We Afford It?

The Norris rural electrification bill, which passed the Senate, has now been been pruned and trimmed considerably. Instead of authorizing an expenditure of $1,000,000,000 during the next 10 years, it now limits outlays to a maximum figure of $420,000,000. Furthermore, the ultra-liberal terms on which loans would be made have been modified.

Even in its chastened form, however, the bill makes prodigal provision for the development of rural electrification during the next decade. It is another authorization to spend, carrying no provision for raising the money. Assuming that a considerable part of the long-term loans advanced to finance presumably self-liquidating electrification projects is ultimately recoverable, passage of the bill would, notwithstanding, necessitate immediate drafts upon the Federal Treasury.

If the Norris bill were in all other respects admirable—and it is seriously defective—it would still be open to criticism on the ground that the Government cannot afford to add several hundred million dollars to expenditures when it is engaged in a losing battle against mounting deficits. We have reached a point, in short, where every spending project has to be tested not only on its merits but by its costs. We have to ask not only whether a proposal is socially useful, but whether we can afford it.

For Study On Its Own Merits.

President Roosevelt's proposal to tax corporate surpluses will undoubtedly gain favor in the eyes of timid Congressmen when they scrutinize the alternatives tentatively suggested by Treasury experts. A comprehensive sales tax, a multiplicity of unpopular excise levies upon articles of mass consumption, lowered exemptions for income taxation, and higher normal taxes are eyed askance in a Presidential election year.

Consequently there is danger that Congress will accept uncritically any tax proposal that is relatively safe politically and which makes a gesture in the direction of fiscal orthodoxy. The President's program, however, cannot be indorsed for such superficial reasons without a careful study of its income producing potentialities and its social and economic implications.

In the first place, Congress should insist upon fuller information as to the basis of revenue estimates. The President assumes that the undivided profits of corporations during 1936 will reach $4,500,000,000. Starting from this figure, he concludes that additional revenues to the amount of $620,000,000 could be obtained by repealing existing corporate taxes and substituting taxes on undivided surplus so graduated as to yield approximately the same revenue obtainable if profits were distributed and taxed in the hands of stockholders.

Some experts contend that the President's estimate of surplus earnings is extravagant while others conclude that it is a possible but improbable maximum. The available data on corporate earnings and dividends over a period of years certainly indicate that the estimate is exceedingly optimistic. There is, furthermore, a large element of guesswork involved in estimates of the additions to income that would result from substituting taxes on corporate surplus for present levies. In some cases, such surpluses would be disbursed in the form of dividends on which low individual rates would be paid.

Even the most careful revenue appraisals are subject to a wide margin of error because so much would depend upon the way in which the Treasury administered a tax on corporate surpluses. If it permitted liberal allowances for depreciation and obsolescence, for instance, the tax base would be narrowed and revenues reduced. On the other hand, a rigorous policy would increase taxable surpluses.

Indeed, the great discretionary powers that would be conferred upon the Treasury to decide where the line between working reserves and taxed surplus should be drawn is one of the major criticisms advanced against the proposed measure. Adequate protection against unfair or oppressive rulings would be difficult to secure because every case would present a special problem, calling for a degree of administrative judgment which cannot be taken on faith.

A Detective's Paradise.

No telling how little pleased the county families were at the recent discovery, in a lonely English ravine, of over a score of newspaper-wrapped parcels containing the atrociously dismembered remains of two women. Cold grue is not the most amiable of neighbors. But certainly this chill wind will have a warming effect in another quarter.

Conan Doyle has taken us all to Baker street, and we know the thrill of professional gratification which would have run through Sherlock Holmes, which must now excite the actual investigators in this case. For every required item on the docket of a ripe, rich mystery, is present in the murder of Mrs. Isabella Ruxton and Mary Jane Rogerson. Scarcely needed is the piquant touch that the ravine bears the name of the "Devil's Beeftub."

Consider that the accused, Dr. Buck Ruxton, is a reputable and highly respected Lancaster physician, who at the preliminary hearing shouted aloud his denial of murdering his wife and their 21-year-old maid servant. Standing at his side in the current trial is Norman Birkett, K. C., foremost criminal lawyer in England, the man who defended young Lord de Clifford not long ago before the House of Lords. And rallying further to the defense, it is reported, may come the one detective in Britain who is known as "the modern Sherlock Holmes"—Sir Bernard Spilsbury, famed for his success in trapping the notorious Dr. Crippen a quarter-century ago.

That was a case to quicken the detective heart. In the Crippen cellar the police found the remains of his wife, sealed in cement and all but obliterated by quicklime. Apparently not a means was left of implicating Crippen. Then in came the young Spilsbury, who whipped a microscope from his pocket, discovered a fragment of skin, found therein evidence of a strange drug, traced the drug to the chemist from whom Crippen had obtained it—and thus closed the circle.

Now, in the Ruxton case, he will have to reverse his tactics and prove that the macabre evidence in the ravine is not, "beyond a reasonable shadow of doubt," the corpora delicti of Mrs. Ruxton and Miss Rogerson. A hundred witnesses for the prosecution, no less, will face him. But that is just the kind of situation upon which the immortal spirits of the hawk-eyed Holmes, the cold-browed Dr. Thorndyke, and the cherubic but dauntless Reggie Fortune are smiling from their detective Valhalla.

Aftermath In Japan.

Favorable reactions all over the world to the selection of the new Japanese cabinet have been clouded by the army's refusal to permit the appointment of a minister of war. By these tactics the army hopes to bring the new cabinet under its control, or at least to modify the sweeping reaction against last week's coup implied by the choice of Koki Hirota to form the new government. The army is not willing to accept this rebuke without a struggle.

Throughout the campaign in China Mr. Hirota has thrown his influence on the side of diplomatic adjustments in place of military invasion. He is said to be the only distinguished civilian, other than the assassinated Finance Minister Takahashi, who has openly opposed the program of the military leaders. Aside from the character of the cabinet he chose, the satisfaction of Chinese officials over his appointment gives the best index to the policies he may be expected to follow.

There seems to be, therefore, only one reasonable interpretation of Mr. Hirota's appointment. Emperor Hirohito and Prince Saionji, Japan's elder statesman, are determined to keep the militarists under control. This policy may be seen as clearly in the retirement from active service of Gen. Araki, former minister of war, as in the personnel of the tentative cabinet. Mr. Hirota and Gen. Araki directly crossed swords over the policies to be followed in China while the former was foreign minister. Apparently the wiser heads in Tokyo have come to the conclusion that the rampant nationalism sponsored by such leaders as Gen. Araki must be checked to save Japan for democracy.

But the army is still a powerful influence in Tokyo, as the forced retirement of Count Terauchi as minister of war in the tentative Hirota cabinet has proved. Count Terauchi is a conservative army man who has nothing in common with the hot-heads and terrorists. His belief that the army should not interfere with policies of the civilian government made him entirely unacceptable to the clique which brought about the recent assassinations. Indications are that Mr. Hirota's choice for foreign minister, Ambassador Yoshida, is even less acceptable to the extremists.

Yesterday's developments are sufficient evidence that the crisis has not yet passed in Japan. Apparently the groups struggling to inaugurate a policy of moderation and order have the upper hand. But the undercurrent of aggression and fascism is still running strong. The most acute test of the liberal faction will come when the cabinet has been completely formed and proceeds to discipline the assassins who almost toppled the government last week. That will be an extremely difficult task, but if it is not courageously performed no civilian government in Tokyo can be considered secure in its position.

A Welcome Change.

Dismissal of the two cases in which land owners challenged the right of the Government to condemn property for the development of low-cost housing projects indicates a welcome change of policy. Solicitor General Reed explained to the Supreme Court that these cases are no longer of practical importance since funds once available for the purchase of the sites in question have been spent on other projects. The Department of Justice is not in a mood to push cases involving constitutional issues through the Supreme Court merely out of academic interest.

Of course this acquiescence in the adverse decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals does not mean that the PWA is abandoning its housing program. All of the projects now under way will be carried out without any necessity for taking private land by the power of eminent domain. The real significance of Mr. Reed's move is found in its implication that henceforth slum reclamation and low cost housing will be left to the States and local governments. Very likely Washington will assist local agencies in this field, but it is not now likely to extend its own direct activities as a builder and landlord.

A much better foundation for a long-time program of home building would have been laid if the PWA had confined its activities to the encouragement of local enterprises, and if the Resettlement Administration had kept entirely out of the housing business. Twenty-two States and at least five cities now have housing agencies authorized to condemn property and erect suitable quarters for the inhabitants of their slums.

These undertakings deserve every encouragement. The dark side of the outlook is that so much money has been wasted as to make it very difficult to find funds for slum reclamation now that a really practical policy appears to be in the making.

Reporters who interviewed George Bernard Shaw as he landed in Miami asked him how he liked the city. "I don't like it," he replied. "I haven't seen it yet." And a lot of us haven't seen Mr. Shaw yet.

Uncle Sam should secure this receipt when he delivers the baby bonds to the veterans: "This acknowledges receipt of payment in full for 1 World War."

The Copperhead's Mistake.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: You can hardly conceive of how devastating to a lot of elderly fellows was your poll of last Sunday, proving that the South has not the slightest use for States' rights, and will gladly and cheerfully vote the damned thing down at the polls next fall.

Did'ye ever hear of a "copperhead"? Copperheads were men in the North during the Civil War who believed that the South fought that bloody conflict in defense of the glorious and deathless principle of States' rights, and not at all for the perpetuation of human slavery. To be a copperhead was to suffer the deadliest of obloquy and to live the rest of one's life an object of scorn in the eyes of one's neighbors. To be a copperhead's son, and I was one, was to fight many a schoolyard battle in defense of father's principle that the South was entirely right in going to any extremity for States' rights. To be a copperhead's son was to watch one's father go through a bitter life, disliked and derided, and often denounced even in public prints and finally to sink into the thankful grave.

And now, when practically everybody in the North has forgotten even the name "copperhead," we, who never can forget our fathers' burden, find that the South doesn't care as much as a battered old hat for the principle of States' rights and never did, but fought the Civil War solely to perpetuate human slavery.

Hence, you must see how much wiser dad would have been if he had stuck with his neighbors to abolition, sectionalism and intolerance of the South and everything Southern. S. J. H.

Notice to P. O. Employes.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: When Senator Norris protested in the Senate a few weeks ago about the continuation in office of Mr. Farley as the Postmaster General, saying he would cost President Roosevelt "millions of votes" if he remained as leader of the Postoffice machine, the national machine and the Democratic State machine of New York, the cynics smiled and said, "This gives Jim his best excuse—he is now in the same class as Tugwell, Ickes, Wallace and those other fellows who have been attacked because they supported the President."

Jim Farley went to New England the other day, it is presumed with the permission of the President, and there announced he was not going to resign as Postmaster General. It was a shrewd move. He went to Manchester to make a speech for Roosevelt. He could find no business men's league in New Hampshire to address, so he swung the lash over the heads of the postal employes and ordered them all into line for Roosevelt. It is understood that all postal employes in New England were given to understand that they had to take a place in the line. Jim was not going to resign.

Notice has now been given with the approval of the President that Farley is expected to round up the postal employes and serve notice to them that a continuation of the "more abundant life," meaning holding on to the fat jobs, depends on who wins the Presidency.

The Marine Band.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Washington, wherefore are you hungry of mind and heart when sumptuous feasts are spread before you!

I deem myself signally fortunate in being able to maintain regular attendance at the orchestral concerts given each week by the United States Marine Band. The program arranged by Capt. Taylor Branson on February 26, was perfect in balance and in power to entertain and inspire.

"Scrambled History."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Pray what kind of "scrambled history" is Dr. George Gallup retailing in the enclosed clipping from his article in Sunday' Post for the American Institute of Public Opinion?

Patrick Henry never even attended the Constitutional Convention. Alexander Hamilton, although present part of the time, took no leading part in the debates. The first nine amendments were not adopted as a compromise in the convention, as Dr. Gallup seems to imply, and the tenth "subsequently" in 1789; they were all adopted by Congress in 1789 and submitted to the States for ratification.

Such a patent and gross mangling of the facts by one who purports to speak with the voice of authority can scarcely lead to the development of an intelligent citizenry. It is more likely to lead to confusion worse confounded so far as an intelligent understandnig of our history is concerned. Surely those who undertake the responsibility of informing the public on such subjects should take the trouble to ascertain their facts before presenting them.

Yours for greater accuracy,

H. W. THATCHER.

Senator Minton's Proposal.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Post reports Senator Minton as advocating that seven judges of the Supreme Court should be required to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional. It was not stated whether he proposed that this be done by law or constitutional amendment.

If the former, such a law would be beyond the power of Congress, because the authority of the court in this respect is derived from that provision of the Constitution that vests the judicial power of the Nation in the Supreme Court, and it necessarily follows that this power must be exercised by a majority of the court. It can, therefore, only be done by an amendment to the Constitution.

But what would be the effect of such an amendment? Instead of cases being decided by a majority of the court as at present it would put it in the power of three judges to uphold by their dissent a law that six of, perhaps, the ablest of the judges believed to be absolutely unconstitutional; or in other words the constitutional rights of the citizen would be subjected to the tender mercies of three judges of the nine instead of being protected by the majority as at present.

"Law-Breaking Rascals."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A friend having sent me clippings of articles from your issues of February 20, 21 and 22 criticizing and condemning the illegal parking and flouting of laws by various Congressmen, I wish to express my approval and congratulate and thank you.

The suggestion of Maj. Gen. Lansing H. Beach, U. S. A., retired, of impounding the cars is excellent and would prove effective in putting an end to the outrage.

Also, I have seen in the Boston papers recently that Senator Borah, in commenting on the matter, said that Congressmen enjoyed no immunity from punishment for violating such laws.

Keep up the good work until you get results by emboldening the District Commissioners to bring some of these law-breaking rascals to book. EDMUND J. BURKE.

Re "Intrenched Greed."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: That was a powerful editorial printed in The Post of February 23, inviting attention to the squalid proceedings by which officials of the Democratic party are permitted to hold big-salaried jobs in re-organizing banks, trust companies and kindred institutions, presumably because of their political chicanery and their estimated capacity to return in votes or contributions a share of the wealth taken from helpless stockholders.

HARRY SCHLESSONGARD.

A Straw Vote On A Straw Issue

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The only possible value of the straw poll on Federal centralization versus States' rights is that it indicates that many young people prefer the former because they think Federal power can "get things done," while States' rights leave the muddle to grow worse. But until we know whether a genuine movement for the protection of all human rights will start with the States or as a nation-wide movement, the issue is largely a blind one, and those who vote on it are only voting for the sacrifice of one set of rights for another.

One might as well ask: Is is better that children be exploited in a Carolina cotton mill, than that a child be forbeidden by Congress to sell papers to support his sick mother? The obvious answer is that government should be able to protect children from exploitation, and also protect their right to take family responsibility. One might ask: Is it better that a family should starve in a Pennsylvania mining town, or that some preposterous justice of the peace should be permitted to lecture the parents on limitation of birth rate? If government supposedly is inadequate to do anything about unemployment, or about the additional outrage of insults to poverty, it is just as incompetent at Washington as at a State Capitol. One might ask: Is it better that taxes and cost of living be increased generally to keep Idaho farmers out of bankruptcy, than that we should eventually pay two or three prices for Idaho potatoes to speculators after the farmers shall have been reduced to share-cropping serfdom? Here the balance is clearly in favor of national action; but as things are, neither national planning nor governmental non-interference prevent the scarcity.

And just at this point communism makes its plausible bid—production for use, not for profit, but at the modest price of the loss of every human right worth preserving; and fascism cuts in with its crazy and desperate orgies of nationalist mythology, "sacred egotism," violence and war.

The kind of government that is sorely needed is a government pledged to protect all legitimate human rights, and given power to withstand the tyranny of pressure groups so as to do justice to the unorganized or to foster their organization for their own protection. What stands in the way of such government? Is the liberalism that allowed liberties to be destroyed because of failure to define those liberties?

On the pretext of free contract it left sharp practice and exploitation unchecked, and the Constitution is even today invoked in the name of "liberty" to protect the spoils and the economic slavery created by a competitive anarchy. On the pretext of "free speech" it has been unable to check wholesale hoax, slander, vitiation of the sources of information, and even propaganda which denies all liberties, until the public mind is so corrupted that it cannot imagine elections that are not put over by empty promises or panic bogeys, or business controlled for common welfare. Even the slogan "human rights above property rights" exposes the inability of liberalist reformers to think of property responsibility as a fundamental human right to be more widely distributed. It is these liberalisms which, getting their materialism from Jeremy Bentham and John Stuart Mill, have now no valid arguments to oppose to Marx and Engels.

This does not mean that the election issue is a straw one. Should the Republicans defeat Roosevelt, they would probably go on with the New Deal. But they are not pledged to avoid chaos, and their record for foresight is not reassuring. W. T. M. GAMBLE.

The Post Impressionist

"The Isles of Greece"

Post Office, Saturday.

If this Column were asked to name a monarch who has been making good against odds, the reply would be:

"George II of Greece."

But we should hastily add: "So far."

In fact, since nobody has asked the question, we shall say so anyhow.

For we know that Greek politics are more complicated than the most hopeful American politician—even in this election year—can legitimately hope American politics will be. We believe that the tranquillity of Europe may depend upon imminent developments in the Greek political situation, yet that this situation is not clear in the minds of most non-Hellenes. And there are moments when we doubt whether the King of the Hellenes himself—however "good" he has made—has a quite precise perception of the potentialities.

We hope that, in the last particular, we are mistaken. But we shall feel more confident after the 1st of June.

George II has borne well the severest test of royalty: the test of exile. The exiled Stuarts—except the Old Pretender and the Cardinal—took to debauchery. Exiled Napoleon took to grouches. The German Kaiser took to the vice of explanation. George lived a quiet life and, so far as he would let anybody see, a contented one.

His English existence contained no spectacular episodes. He wasn't a gay lad, never stepped out—or on the gas. He had no mistress; his automobile never really hurt anybody. He took no part in plots for a violent recovery of his crown. When first offered the throne by boss Kondylis, George said he'd wait till a free plebiscite indorsed that invitation. Only after such an indorsement did he indeed accept.

Safety with justice: these facts indicate wisdom.

There are, however, other facts.

Ever since Italy reaspired to supremacy in the Mediterranean, the chief issue in Greece, though frequently masked, has been an issue between England and Italy. Each of these countries wants to control Greek foreign policy—as a long step toward controlling the Middle Sea.

Well, last year found Greece a republic, yet with a wide rift in the Republican ranks. That clever old Republican and England's friend, Eleutherios Venizelos, attempted to recapture the government, but, like Caesar's Gallic War enemies, had to "seek refuge in flight." His rival Republican, Field Marshal Kondylis, was left at the helm—visited Mussolini and came back vociferous for monarchism.

In October, he abolished the republic. An election restored the monarchy. Kondylis asked George II to come home. En route, George also visited Mussolini, and, on his arrival in Athens, made Kondylis premier.

This looked like harmony; it looked like Italy. But it didn't last.

Kondylis was soon replaced by Constantine Demerdjis, known to be on pretty fair terms with exiled Venizelos. Kondylis went out of office, threatening revolution if ever Venizelos went in.

That was the situation when the country faced its first election under the restored monarchy.

Nobody so much as suggested that the result would affect the job of the King, still less usher-in another republic. Oh, dear, no! All sides agreed that George had made himself too popular with everybody ever to be allowed to leave—and none said so louder than the Republican Venizelists. Everybody agreed that the contest was over the question: Shall Venizelos, and his particular friends who are now in exile, be permitted to return?

Yet what was that save another way of inquiring: Shall Greece be pro-English or pro-Italian?

No wonder Kondylis died: the answer was Venizelist.

Now the surviving Kondylists bitterly regret the restoration they effected. They say that the king who, they thought, had no liking or aptitude for politics, has revealed himself as a clever politician—that they understood he was to forget England and work for Italy, whereas he has turned out to have been working, all the while, for England's Mediterranean supremacy. They say that he has indeed made good against odds—against their odds and too good for them.

There aren't many Kondylists left, but, anyhow, that's what the remnant is saying . . .

Venizelos is represented—by the Venizelists—as an old man, tired of politics, who only wants to end his days in his native land. His fellow-exiles are represented—by their unexiled partisans—as at least equally wearied of politics.

Concerning them this columnist knows little. But concerning him, whom we do know, we simply can't believe that he can ever grow too old to let Greek politics alone, or so friendly with a king as not to want to establish (and boss) a republic. And, meanwhile, here's his son, Maj. Sophocles, in Washington, saying:

"Father expects to land in Greece about June 1st."

Fair Enough

Turnabout.

Vienna, March 6.

KARL NISSELBACK, a naturalized American who has been sentenced to a German prison for two years, may not be a very good citizen of the United States, but, nevertheless, our Government ought to make the Nazis let him go. We could do this by arresting ten German Nazis in New York or Hoboken on a long list of charges and giving them everything that the book calls for—sentences to run consecutively, not currently, and without option of fine.

Our police are very good piling up complaints when they really put their hearts into their work, and it would be no problem at all to retailiate at the rate of ten to one for every American who is slammed into prison for violation of the trick laws they enforce against our people.

For example, a Nazi driving an automobile might be followed through the streets for a few hours and pulled up on enough charges to keep him under glass as long as Nisselback, if we really set out to get rough about the matter. All drivers are guilty of dozens of offenses which we regard as petty violations and not worth prosecution, except where accidents occur, but in a determined campaign to treat Germans as they treat Americans we could bear down and make them squeal in a very short time.

We have laws against smoking in the subways, cluttering fire escapes, impeding sidewalks, loitering, littering and walking on the grass in the parks, and a clever cop, if he wants to, usually can draw a man into an argument and then charge him with conduct calculated to draw a crowd.

• • • •

THIS would be a petty way to act, to be sure, but the Germans are enforcing petty laws against Americans, and the penalties are too serious to be accepted in fun. This Nisselback was held for four months without charges, whereas we can't even pick up a man without telling him why. He was held ten months before he got a trial, and in the long run they gave him two years for having in his possession a newspaper or leaflet which they considered seditious because it criticized the Nazi form of government.

But it is almost impossible to avoid seditious conduct in Germany under their laws. If you were to have among your papers a copy of Winston Churchill's article analyzing Hitler's character, they could give you as much as ten years under their law or even shoot you. If you were to sit in a cafe anyone in their espionage service could claim that he heard you say you thought Hitler wasn't handsome, but only funny.

That would be grounds for your arrest and detention for ten months without trial. Then they could give you two years for attempting to undermine the German government. Nobody can possibly know when he is guilty of seditious conduct in Germany, because sedition is anything they don't happen to like, and they make up their laws from day to day.

• • • •

IT must be kept in mind constantly that the Nazi government is a rule of hoodlums and grafters whose murderous character has been demonstrated not only in the Dollfuss case but in their own historic blood purge, which was very similar to the St. Valentine Day massacre in the Chicago underworld but much bigger and more promiscuous.

Foreign diplomats dealing with their officials proceed on the assumption that most of them are conspirators against the rest of the world, and this is a sound idea, because Nazi literature frankly justifies any treachery, theft or swindle which might promote Germany's interests at the expense of any other nation.

Here in Vienna, von Papen, their ambassador, is an absolute outcast so far as the diplomtic circle is concerned, for everybody remembers his record as military attache of the German Embassy in Washington up to 1916. Nobody wants anything to do with him. The Austrians, of course, want no part of his country, because the only reason the Nazis keep an ambassador here is to organize a traitorous movement and deliver the country to Germany.

This is the sort of racket the American Government is dealing with in Germany, and it is useless to expect that American passports will be respected unless the Nazis understand that we will treat their people as badly as they treat ours.

Nisselback personally isn't very important, but two years in prison is too much for the mere possession of paper which the Germans considered to be seditious. If we had a definition of seditious conduct every Nazi in the United States should be in prison now.

4 Ex-Sheriffs Freed In Fatal Utility Feud

Elizabeth, N. J., March 6 (U.P.).—Four former deputy sheriffs, charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of Mrs. Sophie Crempa, in a feud with a utility company, were acquitted tonight.

A jury, which deliberated three hours, decided that Charles Remley and three brothers—Edward, Richard and Vincent Carolan—were not guilty.

The shooting grew out of an eight-year fight which John Crempa waged, in an attempt to prevent the New Jersey Public Service & Electric Co., from running power lines across his farm.

He short circuited the power lines several times, and the four deputies were ordered to serve a warrant, charging criminal contempt. When they tried to serve the warrant, shooting started. Mrs. Crempa was killed, and her husband was wounded.

The Problem Of Colonies

"Unsatisfied" Powers Force Revision Of Mandate Plan.

By Bertram Pickard.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Geneva.

IT is rumored that Herr Adolf Hitler is preparing another national plebiscite, the purpose of which would be to place before the world the German claim to her lost colonial empire, or at any rate its equivalent. Whether this be true, or not, the German press today is full of colonial discussion. Clearly Germany's demand for colonies will soon reach the active diplomatic stage.

Fascist Italy's claim to colonial expansion is already being staked out, not only by word, but by war as well.

Japan, despite the immense task of consolidating gains in Manchuria, is pushing political control by force of arms in all directions on the Asiatic mainland, while her diplomats keep a lively watch on the markets of the world, not least colonial markets.

If anyone ever thought that the League and the mandates system had closed the era of colonial rivalry, they were wrong.

• • • •

WHAT is the nature of these demands, or claims, that the "unsatisfied" powers (sometimes with less accuracy styled the "Have-Nots" are making? They may, perhaps, be summarized as follows. It is contended that the present distribution of colonies (including mandates) is inherently unfair, for one or more of three reasons:

(1) It results largely from unfulfilled engagements on the part of the major colonial powers.

(2) It condemns countries without colonies permanently to a lower standard of life.

(3) It often gives to colonial powers a disproportionate weight in the counsels of the nations.

As regards the first point, Italy protests vehemently that she did not get the colonial "spoils" promised under the Secret Treaties (London, 1915); while Germany resents the Allied aspersions on her colony-worthiness only less than the war guilt clause of the Treaty of Versailles itself.

The mandates system ingeniously preserved the letter of the Allies' no-annexation promises. Did it preserve the spirit also? In an early session of the mandate commission, Prof. William E. Rappard, one of the ablest members, declared:

In my view, the mandates system was not fully justified by the circumstances which had called it into being. Those circumstances alone are not sufficient to perpetuate the mandates system. It is a question of one or two possibilities. Either the system can be pronounced to be excellent for those under administration in which case there is no reason why the extension of the system to peoples who do not yet enjoy its benefits should not be a source of congratulation; or, on the other hand, there are faults and weak points in the system, in which case there is no reason why it should be continued.

• • • •

FIFTEEN years have passed by. The question can no longer be evaded. Will the cynics be justified and mandates provide an open door to annexation? Or will the mandates system fulfill the hopes of many a student and proponent of the League by opening up the way to a real international partnership in the execution of what Lord Lugard has styled the "dual mandate," covering not only the obligation to further the social and material well-being of native populations (i. e. the "sacred trust of civilization" of Article XXII of the Covenant), but also the admitted need to develop the natural resources of the colonial territories in the interests of humanity at large?

One has a shrewd suspicion that Sir Samuel Hoare's cautious "gesture" concerning raw materials, in his famous Assembly speech of September 11, 1935, had Germany in view, much more than Italy. "The abundance of supplies of raw materials appears to give peculiar advantages to countries possessing them," he admitted; and stated that "the view of his majesty's government is that the problem is economic rather than political and territorial." He proposed that there should be an inquiry "limited in this case to raw materials from colonial areas, including protectorates and mandated territories."

Pending such deferred inquiry, the validity of the economic arguments for a new colonial deal is being discussed on every hand. The question of access to raw materials is recognized to be intimately bound up with that of access to markets. It is true that political control over the sources of raw materials is very unequally distributed. But it is also true that in recent times raw materials have been a drug on the market, and that the problem of getting them is the problem of paying for them. It is further clear, on examination, that the proportion of raw materials coming from colonial territories is a relatively small one.

• • • •

NEVERTHELESS, Sir Samuel Hoare was right to state that the fear of colonial raw materials being monopolized by those in political control was a real one, though he was wrong, I think, to rule out political and territorial motives as of little or no account. But, if concessions are to be made, they should be of such a nature as will strengthen, and not weaken, efforts to organize peace in the world. It was, doubtless, with such an end in view that Sir Arthur Salter, whose authority is unquestioned, put forward the particular proposals he did at a recent Conference on the Colonial Problem held in London last October under the auspices of the National Peace Council.

As regards raw materials he proposed that there should be a general international convention guaranteeing that at all times raw materials should be supplied on equal terms to all purchasers and that even in war-time there should be no interference with that supply except by collective action for the enforcement of international covenants, and that such interference should apply equally to raw materials drawn from all colonies, whether those held by the offending country or others.

As to markets, he favored a policy of "equal treatment" which does not necessarily spell an application of the "open door" policy, in its original form of virtual free trade, implies that equal duties should be placed on goods from whatever country they might come, with no preference for those of the controlling country. This suggestion was made with respect to all non-self governing territories under British control. Such a policy for Great Britain would, roughly speaking, mean a return to pre-Ottawa Conference practice. For most other colonial powers such a policy would of course mean a big break with the tradition of imperial preference. Sir Arthur's suggestions are not very dissimilar from those made by Lord Lugard in the London Times of January 4, 1936.

Rich Nations Urged To Yield Holdings Voluntarily.

• • • •

COMING, finally, to the political and psychological factors, it is clear that opinion is moving in Great Britain whatever the present view of the government may be.

As proof, witness the emphatic exclamation of Mr. Lloyd George in the House of Commons debate February 5. "I don't believe," he said, "there will be peace in the world until you consider the mandates." If this be so, the reported decision of France to give up her mandate over Syria and present that country with its independence in much the same way that Great Britain freed Iraq will be heartening news.

In point of fact what can be done to remove, or at least attenuate, this growing politico-economic tension? Whatever solution is envisaged is hedged about with difficulties. It is very doubtful whether the purely economic adjustments above mentioned could of themselves provide a remedy, in face of so much more radical demands.

The situation really presents itself as a grave dilemna. Referring back to Prof. Rappard's speech before the Mandates Commission, it is plainer today than 15 years ago that the mandates system must be extended, or eventually collapse.

• • • •

BUT the voluntary return to Germany of some or all of the present African mandates as colonies is unthinkable. On the other hand, the acceptance by Germany of mandates under the control of the League is most unlikely so long as other colonial powers retain all their colonies under full sovereign control.

Thus there would appear to be only one logical way out of the impasse which, as a matter of fact, is commending itself more and more to public opinion in several countries (notably Great Britain) and among international organizations working for peace and understanding.

This policy may be summarized under the following points:

(1) One or more of the colonial powers should voluntarily accept the principle of international supervision of some present colonial territories.

(2) The mandates system should be strengthened in the direction of international control.

(3) Some territories now under mandate, or colonial administration, should be transferred to Germany, Italy and perhaps other countries, under such mandate charter as would secure the maximum degree of international control accepted by any of the present mandatories.

It sounds Utopian. Perhaps it is. Nevertheless there are some situations where radical measures become actually easier than tinkering.

The French have a phrase, "faire l'impossible" (do the impossible), which they use to pledge unusual effort in this or that direction.

Self Portrait

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

For Art's Sweet Sake.

Personally, I'm all for the candid camera, the little box that snaps you just as you are scratching your nose or stuffing your mouth with a piece of celery. At least it is painless. And that is more than you can say for having your portrait painted.

This is what happened to me, just another one of those instances that make me glad we really haven't gone back to the horse-and-buggy days. When this country was young, and gentlemen powdered their wigs, they had to sit for hours if they wanted to hand their likenesses down to posterity. No wonder they all look bored, those ancient statesmen, whose paintings adorn our public buildings. How much more realistic they would be to us now if they had been snapped dunking their corn pone.

Herndon Davis, The Post's portrait painter, came up to me and said: "The boss said I've been drawing too many pretty people who look alike, so why don't you pose fore me, so I can prove to him that I have versatility. You're not like anyone else."

IGNORING the implied insult, I said, "Sure, I'll pose, if you'll talk." So he took me up to his attic under the eaves, and sat me in a chair in the most uncomfortable position possible, and said, "Don't move."

I swear I didn't, not once in 40 minutes. But Davis said: "I think I'll give up painting portraits of people now, and go out to the zoo. This has been swell experience painting animals on the move. Sit still!"

They say that swimming will develop in the human body more muscles than the average man knows exist. Portrait-sitting is very much like swimming. It also reveals more surfaces that suddenly begin itching, when stared at by a stout gentleman with a paint-brush in his hand.

However, stiff though my neck grew, I'm afraid that I had the better part of the deal. The facial expressions that darted over Davis's face, as he pursued the elusive smile on the shifting face of his subject, would themselves, if preserved in celluloid, win first prize in any exhibition of candid camera art. Such frowns, it seemed to me sitting there, would have brought tears of envy to the eyes of King Kong. Perhaps the only thing more exasperating than sitting for a portrait is painting one.

IN the course of the sitting, though, Mr. Davis revealed that the hardest portrait he ever had to paint was one of the wife of a well known, wealthy Washingtonian. She twisted and turned so much that Davis, who started out to paint her full-face, ended the day with a profile. He was so upset by the ordeal of trying to limn the features of the lady that he left his paints there, and never had nerve enough to go back.

Mr. Davis says that he doesn't really like painting portraits. If he had his way he would paint nothing but landscapes. Perhaps that's because they don't move. He has traveled a lot, and sketched all sorts of things the length and breadth of the land. His favorite painting is one he did several years ago, when he was in the Army. It is a portrait of Gen. Malin Craig, now chief of staff.

People who have posed for him, and these include many of the great and mighty men of America, often indorse his paintings. The best inscription he ever got was from a Washington physician, who wrote, "You have done kinder things for my face than even Nature did."

Hanging on his wall is the portrait of a lovely lady. In a jesting way I said to him—he had just bawled me out for yawning at the exact moment he was about to sketch in my mouth—that she looked as if she had a sore throat.

"That's the finest compliment ever handed me," he said, "she had a sore throat when I painted that picture. I knew I got her likeness, but I didn't know I had caught it quite that good."

ONE of Davis's best friends is Will James, the cowboy artist. Both come from Oklahoma. Davis says he hopes some day to go back there and work in his native State. He says that cowboys and Indians are less critical of one's work than Easterners and city folk. That's one reason he hates to paint society portraits. The whole family suddenly becomes art conscious, and assumes a critical faculty all at once. The Indians, presumably, just say "Ugh!"

By this time I felt that my face had reached such a state of painful torture that it was no longer right to force it upon the artist. They are notoriously such sensitive souls! So I arose from my seat, like a tired old man, and said "Enough's enough, Davis. I have no right to impose upon you longer. I know you have suffered, but remember it was for Art's sweet sake."

"Suffer?" echoed the artist. "Say, I've been through for forty minutes. You've been asleep."

British Airline Plans Test Hops Across Atlantic This Summer

Government Asked for $500,000 for Experiments Toward New Service; France Also Seeks to Clear Way for Regular Flights to U. S.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 6. — Viscount Swinton, secretary for air, announced today that experimental flights directed toward the establishment of a transatlantic airline will be undertaken this summer by Imperial Airways, the British government-subsidized international airline.

In connection with this statement the government asked Parliament to appropriate £104,000 — about $500,000—for preliminary expenses.

The air force estimates contain an item of £20,000 for Imperial Airways and another £75,000 for any contribution which may be necessary in connection with the establishment of the necessary seaplane and land plane bases.

There is also a grant of £9,000 as half the projected annual subsidy to Imperial Airways for a Bermuda-New York air service to be operated by Imperial Airways and Pan-American Airways in co-operation, probably starting this summer.

Viscount Swinton said he hoped arrangements could be made to route the transatlantic service by way of the Azores and Bermuda.

France in Move.

By the Associated Press.

France yesterday joined European competition for the right to operate a transatlantic air service to the United States, exchanging formalities with this Government which cleared the way for possible experimental flights this year.

British and German companies previously had signified their intention of making such tests this summer.

After these experiments a decision will be made on which country or countries will become the European terminus of the proposed airline—to be operated jointly by private companies here and abroad, geographical factors and the desirability of facilities offered probably will figure in the final choice.

A French mission composed of representatives of private steamship and aviation companies received formal assurances at a meeting yesterday with the official American committee on international aviation that this Government would grant the necessary landing rights for experimental flights this year in return for reciprocal treatment by France. This was said to have been agreed upon.

Present at the meeting were representatives of two American aviation companies which have evinced interest in the establishment of a transatlantic service — Juan T. Trippe, president of Pan-American Airways, and Thomas A. Knowles, representing the Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation of Akron, Ohio.

The official announcement of yesterday's conference did not say that actual experimental flights would be made this year from France, but merely that the requisite permission had been granted if they were decided upon.

In other quarters, however, it was indicated that French interests contemplated such tests this year, probably utilizing a high flying boat of the same type used in regular service between France and South America over the South Atlantic.

Fletcher Says Roosevelt Quit Land Case Test

Ruling Would Have Ended Huge Housing Outgo, He Asserts.

Chairman Henry P. Fletcher of the Republican National Committee, yesterday charged that President Roosevelt was personally responsible for the Government asking dismissal in the Supreme Court of the Louisville land case in which the right of the Government to condemn land for housing purposes was questioned. The suit was dismissed Thursday.

Fletcher charged that, facing certain defeat, "the effect of which would have been to prevent the expenditure of $2,825,000,000 by the slum clearance and low-cost housing authorities and the Resettlement Administration" the President and his advisers "walked out" on the case.

The case had been taken to the Supreme Court by the Government after adverse decisions in lower courts.

Government attorneys had stated the case involved only the Louisville project, already abandoned. The Government months ago halted purchase of land for housing by condemnation.

Fletcher did not say how he arrived at the $2,825,000,000 figure. He pointed out that a brief filed by attorneys in the Louisville case had contended that the Government had no legal right to "enter into a gigantic low-cost housing scheme."

House Weighs Tax Plans

revenues in the 1935 fiscal year. Members also were told that middle and lower class taxpayers are now paying more into the Treasury as result of reduced personal exemptions.

Favors Low Rate.

The Administration's corporation tax schedules would levy taxes starting at 20 to 25 per cent on corporate earnings up to $2,000, and a steep graduation on higher earnings. Believing that small "cushion" reserves should be encouraged, rather than driven into dividends by high taxation, Vinson is drafting a plan to broaden this lower bracket, covering earnings probably up to $10,000, and reduce the rate, possibly below the present 16.4 per cent level.

The Kentuckian, who has substantial support within the subcommittee and without, would increase the rates on the higher income brackets. Thus, if a corporation converts a high percentage of its profits into reserves, it would have to pay an extremely high rate of tax for the privilege of doing so. By revising the schedule accordingly, Vinson told the sub-committee that no great loss in revenue estimated under the President's plan would result. In one authoritative quarter, it was said yesterday that Treasury experts are showing a new interest in the Vinson plan.

Chairman Samuel B. Hill, directing the sub-committee tax study, adjourned the exploratory revenue researches yesterday after three days of continuous hearings, during which details of the President's proposals have been reviewed, and a score of other tax proposals brought into the picture. The study will resume Monday and continue throughout next week. Prevailing sentiment among sub-committee members was that the President's proposed corporation taxes, with revisions possibly along the Vinson line, will be kept in the bill. There is still broad skepticism on the question of reviving processing taxes, however, even if they are thinly spread.

Opposing Views.

Meanwhile, Chairman Robert L. Doughton, of the House Ways and Means Committee, took the radio last night to predict that the new revenue asked by the President can be raised "in a way that will neither impose hardships nor retard recovery, and will actually result in a more just tax system."

Taking the opposite view, House Minority Leader Bertrand H. Snell broadcast a radio denunciation of what he called the President's "half-baked" tax program and "but one more verse in the New Deal's unchanging theme, 'Soak the saver.'"

"Excessive taxes, wherever laid, sap the productive energies of a people, prostrate the spirit of ambition and invention which is the keystone of America's greatness," Snell said. "The choice is before Congress today. There is but one way out! It is to curtail reckless spending, stamp out spoils, restore the competitive civil service and enact an honest tax measure to bring in revenue equal to outgo."

As Chairman Hill indicated the sub-committee's willingness to explore every possible source of revenue before reaching a final decision on the President's plan, the Treasury yesterday submitted a new batch of tax alternatives, from which members generally shied, and which the Treasury made clear it did not recommend.

Alternates Proposed.

They were:

An increase of one-half cent in the present tax of 1 cent per gallon on gasoline, estimated at $80,000,000.

Reimposition of the bank check tax of 2 cents, estimated at $47,000,000.

A 10 per cent tax on slot machines, unofficially estimated as capable of raising $50,000,000.

A special unearned income surtax estimated as raising $283,200,000 for 1937 fiscal year, and $472,000,000 in 1937 calendar year.

Elimination of present corporation dividend exemption from the normal dividend income tax, estimated at $54,000,000 in 1937 and $90,000,000 in 1938.

Abolition of the present $40,000,000 exemptions from estate taxes, estimated at $31,000,000 in 1937 and $53,100,000 in 1938.

Imposition of present individual income taxes on small inheritances and gifts with a credit of $40,000, estimated at $325,000,000 in 1937.

Chances Are Slight.

These proposals, added to the manufacturers' excise tax suggestions and income-tax revision studies submitted by the Treasury without recommendations on the previous day, were discussed at some length in the sub-committee, but it appeared that few, if any, of them will be incorporated in the tax bill. Not only does the Administration decline to sponsor them but also, with a few exceptions, members themselves are afraid of their broad implications. One of the exceptions is the manufacturers' excise tax, favored by at least one Ways and Means Committee Democrat, Representative John W. McCormack, of Massachusetts, and supported by a large bloc of Republicans.

Submission by the Treasury yesterday of the figures on which the President's corporation tax proposals were calculated followed a challenge by a number of fiduciary authorities of the tax base used by the Administration.

Following is the table prepared by the Treasury, showing its estimates of taxable base and revenue yield, covering corporations showing a net income in the calendar year, 1936:

(In millions of dollars.)
1. Statutory net income	$1,300
2. Taxes included in (1) to be repealed:
*Capital stock tax	103
Excess profits tax	5
3. Dividends received not included in (1), 90 per cent of total dividends received	1,000
4. Aggregate taxable income	2,308
5. Cash dividends paid	3,540
6. Withheld earnings (4) less (5)	4,768
7. Estimated tax on (6) assuming distribution to individuals, plus normal tax on present dividends	1,752
8. Loss in revenue from repeal of corporate income, capital stock and excise profits taxes	1,132
9. Net increase in revenue	620

*Total estimated capital stock tax of both net income and deficit corporations, $163,000,000.

Essentially "Simple."

Representative Doughton in his radio speech last night admitted there was much "confusion" as to what the President's tax program comprised, but insisted it was essentially "simple."

"It is to place all taxpayers on the same footing," he declared, contending that "excessive accumulation of current earnings by corporations is the biggest leak in our tax system" and operates "to cause great artificial consolidations of capital and disregard the interest of the small stockholders."

He said it would end double corporate taxation by providing "only one corporation tax instead of three."

"While I believe the principle of reform embraced in the President's message to be sound, it must, of course, be applied constructively and with the definite view in mind of doing no injustices to any taxpayer or any legitimate industry."

Representative Snell, on the other hand, charged the Administration with "playing hide and seek" with its program.

"What sort of tax bill ultimately will be presented to the House is a mystery still confounded by an astonishing bewilderment in the New Deal high command," Snell said. "Their dilemma is very real. They must have new revenues at this session of Congress—or else they must find something else to use for money."

Demanding immediate retrenchment, Snell charged that for three years "the substance of the Nation has been dissipated recklessly in ill-considered experiment, in waste, incompetence and political spoils."

If the New Deal is not willing to retrench, and enact an "honest" tax program, Snell said, "this job will be taken over by a Republican House after the November elections."

Senate Group Attacks Health Fund Slashes

House Members Join in Protest Against Cuts in District Bill.

With public health items sharply reduced in the 1937 District supply bill that has passed the House, the campaign for adequate appropriations now veers to the Senate. The Washington Post desires that this city have the best public health conveniences in the Nation. This is one of a series of articles designed to show Congress the District's health needs.

By Gerald G. Gross.

Yesterday, while District health officials were wondering how they could stretch their funds to carry through the fiscal year, the emasculated 1937 appropriations bill passed the House.

Senator Royal S. Copeland, a member of the Appropriations Committee, to which the measure now goes for consideration, said he was "disappointed" by the Lower House permitting it to go through with public health and hospital items ruthlessly slashed.

Senators Adams and Russell, also members of the Appropriations Committee, likewise expressed sympathy with Washington's campaign for money to check the steadily rising tuberculosis toll, eliminate sordid conditions in the municipal hospitals and protect the lives of children.

Representative Marcantonio, well informed of the needs of the indigent sick because he comes from New York's congested Upper East Side, called the bill "outrageous." He and Representative Amlie, Wisconsin Progressive, who said Washington hospitals are so bad they ought to be closed, were among the 26 members who voted "no" on the measure yesterday.

Representative Kent Keller, Illinois Republican, is one of the fortunates who have beaten tuberculosis. Once his life was virtually despaired of. So it was no great surprise that, in commenting on the Capital's fight for adequate public health appropriations, he said he hoped the battle would be won.

"It's too bad," said Senator Copeland, formerly health commissioner of New York City, "that the health items were treated as they were. I am disappointed."

He declared he would argue, in committee, not only for restoration of items which the House eliminated but also for continuance of the $5,700,000 Federal lump-sum appropriation.

"I have always been out of patience," commented Senator Adams, "with the policy of spending plenty for the protection of property and not enough for the protection of health. I am in favor of appropriating adequate funds for the public health here and everywhere."

Senator Russell said he had not studied the District bill carefully, but was emphatic in asserting "Congress should make ample provision to protect the health of Washington citizens."

Marcantonio pulled no punches as he sailed into the amputated supply bill.

"I think it is outrageous," he said. "You can take my word for it, all of us 26 who voted against did so in protest against the way it treats the District. Why, that bill makes me gag.

"It is the worst form of inhumanity to chisel on matters affecting the lives of human beings."

Amlie said:

"A good deed would be done if Washington hospitals were closed. Then the public would not be misled."

quorum. Succeeding in this, she demanded a roll call vote upon the passage of the bill, to the apparent displeasure of Chairman Blanton.

Other members who joined Mrs. Norton in expressing their dissatisfaction with the measure by voting against it were:

Progressives — Hull, Wisconsin; Amlie, Wisconsin.

Ballou Defended.

Minority Leader Snell clashed with Blanton as the clerk resumed reading the bill shortly after the House convened.

Arising to defend Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, Snell charged the sub-committee chairman with inserting insinuations into his questioning of Ballou on communism during the executive hearings.

Explaining that he and Ballou had grown up and gone to school together and that he was well acquainted with Dr. Ballou's family and background, Snell said:

"I know there is not one drop of blood in his whole fiber that is favorable to communism or the teaching of subversive doctrines."

The House applauded its approval.

Blanton then took the floor and urged members to get copies of the sub-committee's hearings and read answers Ballou had given regarding his service on the Commission on Social Studies sponsored by the American Historical Association. He also made veiled references to the approval by Ballou of questionable textbooks and magazines.

To this Snell retorted:

"I have read the testimony, and it's full of insinuations put there by the chairman."

Zioncheck, who came near to a fist fight with Blanton on Thursday, attacked the anti-red rider as "coercive legislation that stifles free speech" and added:

"The gentleman from Texas, through his efforts, is creating a scheme of fascism in this country."

He also complained that the Washington police are "persecuting" taxicab drivers.

After he had concluded, Blanton said:

Crawford in Skit.

"This sub-committee pays no attention to the gibes from the gentleman from Washington. Last year he did good work. But now we feel sorry for him. Something seems to have gone wrong with him."

After Representative Crawford (Republican), of Michigan, had participated in a carefully rehearsed skit about how much taxes he pays in Saginaw as compared with Washington, Blanton bellowed:

"The people in Washington are God's chosen people and Congress has always been generous to them. We have not cut down one single penny for health. The bill provides more money for health facilities than the budget of any comparable city. Our only cuts have been on the high salaries."

He then explained that the sub-committee had slashed $1,000 off the salary of Dr. Edgar A. Bocock, superintendent of Gallinger Hospital, because the physician gets food and board and pays no taxes.

"Why, he's better off than we members of Congress," Blanton said. "It costs us $2,500 to get elected and to come here. I'm so poor now that I have to sell a piece of property ever two years to live here."

District Overlooked.

While the House was voting to reduce its Federal contribution to the District from $5,700,000 to $2,700,000, Chairman Mead, of the House Postoffices and Post Roads Committee, introduced a bill which would enable the States to tax certain Federal property. The District was not included in the privilege.

The taxation privilege was not extended to postoffices and other permanent property, but to undefined Federal holdings not used in the normal operations of the Government.

MONGOLIA, GOAL OF JAPANESE EXPANSIONISTS.—Militarists, curbed by calmer heads who see their empire hurled into war with Russia, have plunged Japan into a domestic crisis with the assassination of leaders and the downfall of a stabilizing cabinet. Possession of Inner Mongolia, adjacent to Manchukuo, and a puppet of the Soviet, is the militarists' goal. Photos show (upper left) a group of Buriat Mongols, nomads of Inner Mongolia. Hundreds of thousands of these people, and such Mongolian families as shown in the lower right, are falling under domination of Manchukuoans and Japanese. 2 Christian Science Lectures Presented Lectures on Christian Science were delivered Thursday night at the First Church of Christ, Scientist, and in the National Theater Friday noon, by William E. Brown, C. S. B., of Los Angeles, Calif. Brown is a member of the board of lectureship of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass. These lectures were under the auspices of First Church of Christ, Scientist, of this city. The lecturer said, in part:

"It is apparent to all who have given the matter sufficient consideration that what we term our environment, or experience in life, is a matter of consciousness; or in other words, one's environment is only the expression of one's thinking, and consequently can be changed only by a change in thinking. Paul summed up the entire matter by declaring that "to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Since in one's present environment there occur the experiences termed sin, poverty, unhappiness, disease, old age and death, it is evident that their supposed necessity or possibility must have existed first in consciousness before they could be expressed in environment or experience. This simple analysis immediately suggests the remedy; that is, permanently to expel these so-called activities from consciousness, to the end that they may be forever expelled from one's environment."

Peace Talks On Schedule Of First Lady

Luncheon in New York on Itinerary; Plans to Return March 14.

Indefatigable Mrs. Roosevelt is leaving town tomorrow for a speaking trip which will take her to four cities in Ohio and Michigan. The subject of her addresses will be "Ways to Prevent War."

The talks will be at Grand Rapids, Mich., on March 9; Toledo, Ohio, March 10; Cleveland, March 11, and Dayton, March 12. In part her talks will dwell on the theory that peace would be easier to bring about if munitions plants were owned by the Government.

Mrs. Roosevelt will stay at hotels in the various cities she visits. On March 14 she will be in New York to speak at a luncheon given by the Scholastic Press, a group of high school and college journalists. She will return to Washington immediately after the luncheon.

Mrs. Roosevelt will receive a fee for her lectures, but has not yet said what she plans to do with the money. The organizations sponsoring her talks will turn the funds over to charity. With the proceeds from the talk she gave in Chicago last fall on the same subject, Mrs. Roosevelt aided the treasury of the American Friend's Service committee, which has also benefited financially from her radio broadcasts.

Ways and means of promoting peace has long been a subject in which Mrs. Roosveelt takes an active interest. She is a member of numerous antiwar organizations. Last May she spoke at the dinner in Washington in honor of the late Jane Addams given by the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. Since she has been in the White House, Mrs. Roosevelt has addressed the banquets held here annually by the Conference on the Cause and Cure of War.

Among her friends are several women outstanding in peace work. Miss Addams, who in her lifetime was international president of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, was a warm personal friend of the First Lady's, as is Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the Conference on the Cause and Cure of War.

Mrs. Roosevelt has written several magazine articles on the promoting of peace, and contributed a chapter to the book "Why Wars Must Cease," compiled by the Conference on the Cause and Cure of War.

Dyeing Solves Last Spring's Coat Problem

Garment Can Be Relined and Transformed for Modest Sum.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

"DEAR, DEAR," sighed Mrs. X. as she lifted her old spring coat from the packing case. "It was worn last year, and worn the year before—and it looks like it's going to be worn again!"

Her daughter unfolded it and held it up. "Not bad style," she said, "and the material has held its own."

"It cost a lot to begin with," her mother said. "Which goes to show, it pays to pay!"

"Why don't you have it dyed?" asked her daughter. "A navy blue, perhaps? Dyed and relined!"

"Why, it would cost as much as a new coat," replied Mrs. X.

"No, it wouldn't," the young girl answered. "A friend of mine knows of a place that does marvelous work. I'll find out more about it."

She did. And was her mother delighted. For a most amazingly modest sum the old coat was relined, and dyed, and now it looks like new.

Maybe you'd like to do the same? Call us and we'll tell you more!

Bath Powder Bargain.

IT'S a good thing seeing is believing, for otherwise you wouldn't trust your eyes when you saw the mammoth boxes of bath powder sold in a local store.

They're simply gigantic. And why? Because they were specially made for men.

The manufacturer believes that men seldom use bath powder because they don't like to be bothered with dabbing it on. So, he puts out these man-size boxes of an especially fine powder so subtly scented that the veriest he-man couldn't object. The price? Eighty-nine cents.

New Robes for Men.

ALREADY the man-about-the-house is finding his flannel robe too warm to wear when he sits around in the evening listening to the radio, reading or sipping his Scotch and soda. And probably that flannel robe is beginning to look the worse for wear. So now, right now, is the time for him to invest in one of those no less than scrumptious crepe faille robes selling for as little as $10 in a certain downtown store.

They are not "just robes," mind you. They were designed by Paul Poget. They have style, quality and a look of luxury about them. And since they fold into small bundles and don't wrinkle easily they're just about perfect for traveling.

Handmade Undies.

BOY, OH, BOY! And are they scrumptious! We refer to the handmade new silk undies which have arrived just in time for spring. They're selling in a local shop where most people think the prices are way out of bounds. They aren't, though. Proof—the lingerie. It's really lovely. Panties, $1.95. Slips, $2.95. Gowns, $3.95.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 323, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

THEY'RE ALL stuck up with paint these days, because they're fixing themselves an apartment in somebody's attic where the rent is cheap and the rooms are big. And it is going to be darling when they finish. The walls they painted chocolate brown and put a natural-colored matting on the floor. The furniture and woodwork they painted in a sunny shade of chartreuse . . . this color also went on the low bookcases that wound around a good part of the irregular wall spaces. For the studio couch, they got a homespun type of material in flame color . . . this same material in a sheer fabric they used at the windows, making the curtains on draw rods.

The chairs they covered in plaid ginghams that repeated the various colors in the room. Peasant pottery and peasant linens added gay details . . . a group of their most interesting plates they hung on the wall in a row just above the low bookcases. When gardens are in bloom again, they expect to have nasturtiums and zennias in round glass bowls. They're even thinking about adding a pair of parakeets just help the color scheme! And when they have parties they are going to serve cafeteria style, giving each guest a bright tray in a different color.

When all's said and done, they hope to have a delightfully informal place where they can slump down in their chairs nights and be very comfortable with good books . . . or where the jolliest parties ever can be stirred up on the spur of the moment.

Brown or Blue Silk Suit; Soft Collar Is Featured

FOLLOWING THE TYPE of the wool tailleur is this pure silk suit with the "seven-eighths" coat. It comes in either brown or dark blue, with a white geometric print. The blouse is a sheer silk made with a soft turn-down collar and tiny round buttons down the front between rows of tucks. It's the ideal frock to wear now under your new spring coat. And, of course, it's perfect for hot, midsummer traveling, and splendidly adapted to both street and office wear. Available in a local store. Today's HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Preventing Blindness.

WE ARE IN an era of prevention because we have found that in the long run it is cheaper. We attempt to avoid floods by building dikes and planting forests. It is far simpler to immunize against diphtheria so that the patient cannot contract the disease than it is to try to save his life once he has fallen a victim to this dreadful malady. We have means of vaccinating not only against smallpox, but scarlet fever and whooping cough as well. Furthermore, we endeavor to ward off deafness by careful attention to colds and ear infections and blindness through proper remedial measures applied early in life.

Most States have pessed laws which compel physicians and midwives to drop into the eyes of newborn babes a dilute solution of silver that will completely destroy infection if present. If inflamation of the eyes occurs it is known as ophthalmia neonatorum. It is a serious disease and all too frequently blindness follows unless the silver solution is used promptly.

Trachoma, another contagious disease, sometimes results in blindness, but more often it brings about so great a loss of vision that the afflicted person is unable to carry on ordinary work. It is preventable by proper hygiene, and a recognized survey is under way to detect cases in the early stages, insure proper treatment, and thus prevent its spread to others.

There are certain hotbeds of trachoma in this country, such as the mountains of Tennessee, the southern part of Illinois. Public clinics have been opened for treatment, and nurses have been sent into the smaller communities to ferret out early cases.

There are some children who have what is known as a juvenile form of cataract. This prevents light from reaching the retina of the eye, but fortunately these cataracts can be removed, usually with good enough vision resulting to allow children to attend sight-saving classes or even regular schools.

Recent work on the part of the American Society for the Prevention of Blindness has been directed toward the treatment of syphilis in the prospective mother, so that blindness from this cause will not occur in the child. Expectant mothers should have blood tests made in the first months of pregnancy.

Fifty per cent or more of all blindness can be prevented. Much depends, however, upon the co-operation of parents and the recognition of the fact that blindness is one of the most serious handicaps that can afflict any one.

TWO ON SAFARI

—By GEORGE AGNEW CHAMBERLAIN—

Ballard Mallory, young American explorer, accepts a commission to find the young Hon. Laurence Morland, who has disappeared in Africa. Aboard ship he meets Josephine Caccoden, enigmatic young Britisher, who calmly announces she is going with him. He tries to prevent her, their wills clash, she outwits him and at last he agrees. At a hotel in Lourenco Marques she receives a cable which distresses her. She tears it up and recovers her impenetrable poise.

Chapter XVI.

Aboard the Ketch.

"TOO bad," said Josephine, as she also rose and started toward the door so slowly that she drew him with her. "Couldn't you at least have left it open?"

"I don't understand you," said Kennicott, as they reached the hall. "I've never met another English girl anything like you."

"You speak as if I were a shock."

"You are," he replied emphatically.

"Then I'll give you time to recover. Good night, Mr. Kennicott, and thank you."

A moment ago he had started to turn his back on her, but now it was he who found himself dismissed. He stood in a daze, staring down the long hall at her disappearing figure. If she had so much as turned her head to right or left he would have followed and made a last attempt to crash through the wall of her imperturbability. But she did not turn, for already he was gone from her thoughts. She reached her room and entered to find Mrs. Semster pacing up and down, wringing her hands in distraction.

"Oh, Miss, I thought you would never come—and he forbade my looking for you!"

"Why are these things on the bed?" asked Josephine, regarding the identical garb she had worn throughout the day

"It's what you're to wear in case you still intend to go."

"Of course I'm going, but I don't care to be ridiculous. I'll wear a frock or a traveling suit."

"Please, Miss," said Mrs. Semster earnestly, "I knew you had no idea of what's before you. Don't go, Miss, I beg you. Stay here. Wait for him here."

"If it's as bad as that," said Josephine, "I'll wear whatever you say."

Prepares to Depart.

She began disrobing thoughtfully. With Mrs. Semster's assistance she donned the articles on the bed, then opened the larger of her two trunks and studied it carefully. Folding the black chiffon frock she had worn at dinner, along with its slip and her stockings, she proceeded to pack them.

"You can't! You mustn't!" cried Mrs. Semster.

"Keep quiet!" ordered Josephine, tucking the slippers into two corners, slamming the lid and locking it successfully. She thrust the key deep into her pocket. "What are you going to do about it?"

"Nothing," sobbed Mrs. Semster, "because I can't. I like you and I like him. Yes, there's one thing I can do. I've failed him; I'll give him back his 5-pound note."

"Oh, I wouldn't do that," said Josephine. "Give it to me instead." She held out her hand.

The woman regarded her with unbelieving eyes. "You mean it, Miss?"

"Indeed I do."

Mrs. Semster's sallow cheeks took on a mottled color. She abstracted the note, tightly folded in a thin, long strip, from inside her belt and handed it over. "I'm sure you're welcome," she gulped.

At that moment there came a knock on the door. Ali entered, accompanied by two other Zanzibaris. They picked up the tin trunks and departed. Almost half an hour elapsed before Mallory put in an appearance and during all that time Mrs. Semster continued to weep softly while Josephine, her legs outstretched, smoked one cigarette after another. He glanced from girl to woman, his brows gathered in a frown.

"The wrong one is crying," he declared, then his eyes fixed on Josephine. "Come along, youngster; we're off."

She flushed, hesitated for an instant, then rose and followed him through the door and out to a waiting car. Ten minutes later, though her experience with steamers was limited, she knew enough to feel a qualm at beholding the vessel she supposed was about to transport her up the coast. In the glare of clustered working lights, the huge sheds and gigantic electric cranes stretching into invisibility down the mile-long quay took on a grotesque appearance. Aided by the fact that the tide was low, and other ships much larger, they dwarfed the coaster into insignificance.

A Change in Mallory.

During the ride Ballard had said nothing; now, still wordless, he nodded for her to get out. She descended and waited while he paid the fare. She sensed a change in him quite independent of the change in his clothes. After a bath and a shave he had dressed in khaki shirt and riding breeches, lerai hat, socks and boots laced halfway up the calf—nothing else. No underwear, but as a concession to the chill of the night air he had put on a tweed jacket.

The outfit gave him a business-like air decidedly at variance with his pondering mood, but going down the steep gangway from the wharf he roused himself sufficiently to turn and offer her his hand. She refused it, preferring to grip the stretched wire cables and swing herself down. To her surprise he led the way straight across the deck to a gap in the farther rail from which descended a Jacob's ladder. There he paused and drew to one side.

"You'd better take it backward; it's the proper way."

She stopped beside him and peered down at a boat which looked like the new-born offspring of the vessel on which they stood.

"Why?" she asked, drawing back. "What do you mean?"

"That's it," said Ballard with a short laugh, "our boat. Get aboard or they'll sail without you. Here; I'll show you how." He caught the guide ropes, ran down backward and stood looking up at her from below. "You don't have to come if you don't want to."

At the taunt her hesitation vanished. Fixing her attention on imitating him exactly she tried to run down the hanging ladder, missed the last three steps, but tumbled safely into his arms. He held her close for a mere instant in time, but it seemed crammed to bursting with potentialities. Abruptly, as though at a command, his arms turned cold and hard. He set her on her feet and led her to a tiny, oven-like cabin.

"This is yours," he explained, "but you don't have to stay in it. Better not."

One look and she gave up all thought of dozing in privacy throughout the voyage. She followed him out to the deck again and was immediately distracted by the hubbub of casting off. Hawsers came hurtling down from the larger steamer to be promptly hauled in and coiled. Three tremendous hoots, out of all proportion to the size of the little craft, announced their departure and as soon as a clear stretch of water surrounded them the tiny boat seemed to take on size. It was a deep-waisted vessel with a high poop amidships on which she and Ballard stood. Directly beneath them, occupying all the space between the poop and the rise of the prow, was a solid mass from which rose an overpowering effluvium.

A Sickening Journey.

"Funny thing about those boys," commented Ballard. "On the way up to the Rand, somehow they don't seem to smell; but when they're headed for home—phew!"

Only then did Josephine realize that the mass was composed of heads close together, their faces upturned; of arms and legs so interlaced as to cover every square inch of the deck.

Her nostrils dilated and then collapsed in a spasm of nausea; she hurried to the side of the ship. Ballard did not follow her, but presently Ali, appearing from nowhere, opened out a long hammock chair almost as flat as a bed. When she recovered, if only momentarily, Ballard came over, took her by the elbow, persuaded her to stretch out and adjusted the head cushion.

"Lie as flat as you can," he advised, "and look at the stars while they're still steady. You may not believe it, but you can get used to any smell."

She rocked her head from side to side and moaned. He gave an order in a low tone and Ali reappeared to arrange a second chair parallel with and facing the first. Ballard reclined in it, close beside her. Feeling his presence, her hand groped toward him. He took it and immediately was overwhelmed by a sense of her youth and child-like dependence.

"Poor kid," he murmured, "you'll have to grin and bear it. There's nothing I can give you—none of those fancy things you read about really helps."

Her fingers closed tightly over his as if all she asked was some tangible support as an anchor for her shaken courage. Her arm relaxed to lie full length, but her grip never lessened through all the hours till daylight. They had chugged the full length of the bay and he dreaded the moment when the little craft should bury her nose in the billows of the Indian Ocean, quiver from stem to stern, shake her head and roll. But with daylight and the open sea, swept by the sweet breath of the northerly trades, Josephine, to his amazement, quickly came to life. Her eyes cast upon her imprisoned hand a single bewildered look; the next instant she had released it. Free of him and her chair, she rose to stride boyishly the breadth of the tiny quarterdeck and back.

Has Prosperity Plan

Underwood & Underwood.
MRS. ALBERT L. DEANE.

Warless World May Be Made By U.S. Women

This Is Belief of Mrs. Deane, Well-Known Leader in Youth Movement.

WHAT AMERICAN WOMEN WANT, they get. If they can make it clear, they desire, above everything, an orderly, warless world, and if they demand this order be based upon a dependable plan, the American man will not rest until this is accomplished.

This is a belief of Claire Courteol Deane (Mrs. Albert L. Deane), widely known clubwoman, pacifist and worker for "opportunities for every youth." Mrs. Deane recently was in Washington on her way from her home in White Plains, N. Y., to her ranch in Lillian, Ala.

Yesterday at the Shoreham Hotel she told of how her interests as a mother led to the larger interest in working for world peace, and explained her convictions that the latter is based on national security.

"Prosperity Insurance."

An attractive woman with hazel eyes and gray hair that matched the trim gray dress she wore, she talked earnestly but quietly about the two projects in which she is most interested—peace and "prosperity insurance."

She is convinced "What women want, men will bring about," and feels "If the American woman can so expand her interests that she cares deeply, sincerely and earnestly for a peaceful, prosperous world, the American man will work toward that goal."

Depression, she believes, leads to national restlessness; insecurity makes for international misunderstanding, which in turn frequently ends in war.

She believes peace depends largely on prosperity, but unlike many persons of the same opinion, she has a definite idea about how "just-around-the-corner prosperity" can be made a permanent thing in America.

In this connection she mentioned the Deane Mutual Security Plan for restoring American opportunity. This, she said, was worked out by her husband, who has had a long and successful record of putting his ideas along this line into practice.

Based on Averages.

Prefacing her discussion of the plan with a definition of national properity as "Universal employment in productive enterprise," Mrs. Deane pointed out, "this can be measured by the highest average weekly hours of employment over the previous 10 years—designated as the 'long time average.'

"When the current average weekly hours of employment, designated as the 'monthly average,' fall below the long-time average, a depression is indicated. When the monthly average goes above the long-time average, a boom is at hand."

Explaining how National prosperity could be kept at the long-time average under the plan, she said, "the income or buying power of all workers would be supplemented the moment a depression is indicated and thus would supplement falling demand. The moment a boom is indicated, pay rolls would be taxed, thus increasing prices and reducing effective demands."

Stressing how "the use of such a plan is our simple alternative to war," she further explained, "If our people always had the assurance of jobs, by which they could support themselves in comfort, that would certainly help to dispel confusion, uncertainty, unrest, fear and the possible threat of war in our own country.

"If our producers did not need to bribe other nations to buy our goods but could have a prosperous home market capable of absorbing all that we produce—or the equivalent in imports—the greatest cause for international friction or war would be eliminated."

Woman Nearing 30 Asks This Question: Is It Advisable to Marry Man One Doesn't Really Love in Order to Have a Home, Children and Companionship?

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been very much interested in the recent discussion carried on in your column regarding the youth of today, but here is a question coming from one nearly 30. Would it be better to marry a man one did not really love than to face the possibility of never having a home of one's own and children and also the possibility of a lonesome old age?

* * * *

I have never really given the matter very serious consideration until recently because I have always had numerous interests and a number of men friends and have thought of marriage as something in the far distant future. As a matter of fact, I have put other things ahead of marriage until now, although I have always wanted to get married eventually. I am of average looks and intelligence and have had the average number of proposals, I suppose, some from very attractive young men whom most girls would have fallen for, and some from men not so attractive. However, I have always been more interested in my hobbies, in dating (but not promiscuously) and in having a good time than I have been in settling down.

* * * *

All of a sudden, however, I am confronted with the realization that if I am ever going to get married and have a home, I had better begin to think about it more seriously. The men I meet these days who would be the right age for me are either married or engaged and, besides, I believe that most men in their thirties prefer girls in their late teens or early twenties. I am beginning to wonder whether a man would want to marry a woman who is in her late twenties or early thirties.

* * * *

Therefore, my problem is whether to marry this man I have been going with for the past several years, and whom I don't really love, or whether to wait, with the idea that I will eventually meet someone who will measure up to my standards and at the same time will not be married or engaged. The man with whom I am going now has some very fine qualities, but he also lacks certain characteristics that I would like the man I marry to have. I am just a little bit afraid I might regret it if I married him, although if I don't I may never have the home I am looking for. In that case, of course, I still have many outside interests, but they get more shallow as one grows older. Sincerely,

UNDECIDED.

Psychologist's Definition of Love Presented.

DEAR UNDECIDED: A man who, before his death, was director of the Community Church Mental Hygiene Clinic of New York City and former psychiatrist in the Children's Court of that city, once wrote a book in which he brilliantly discussed love and marriage at considerable length. Among other things, he wrote: "Men and women would be far happier if they planned their marital relationships according to the deep compatabilities of social and intellectual and occupational interests, responsibilities toward children and state, mutual helpfulness and acted as if love might be the reward of five or ten years of successful co-operation.

"The commonly misused word 'love,' in whose name so many crimes are committed by the emotionally immature, the romantically idealistic, and the psychologically infantile, should have its connotations changed. It is usually believed that love belongs in a special category of human emotions and feelings, but, as a matter of fact, it is no more than a special form of the social feeling, the communal consciousness on which all human relations are based. Love is friendship plus the element of heterosexual co-operation. Love equals friendship plus sex . . ."

* * * *

He also said: "The vast majority of people believe that they must fall in love or be in love before they can be happy in a sexual relationship. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Occasionally a man and a woman see each other for the first time and sense a feeling of complete kinship which they call falling in love; and, on the premise that because love is present, all else can be attained, they marry and live happily ever after according to the time-honored formula of the story books. But this probably occurs with great rarity. For, as we have explained, love is the result of years of co-operation of mutual enjoyment and mutual suffering. It cannot then, except in the most unusual cases, be the premise of happy sexual relations. 'Falling in love' is the happy reward of a correctly and normally lived life a deux, not the foundation of a sexual relation. If this simple psychological truth were more commonly recognized much of the romantic twaddle of our neurotic drama and literature would disappear, as would many of the post-marital tragedies now all to commonly found in courtroom and clinic."

Give Less Thought to Love; More to Combined Assets.

"A GREAT MANY marriages," he continued, "would turn out more happily if the contracting parties gave less thought to love and more to the matter of financial budgets, the pedagogic principles according to which children were to be educated, the mutual use of leisure, the past performances in social co-operation, the willingness of each to share responsibility and the like. When a man goes into a business venture or partnership 'on a shoe string' he is put down as a fool by his associates, but the same man, entering into marriage with a girl because she has a pretty figure, plays bridge well, and likes to go to speakeasies, is congratulated by his friends. Ten years later he is having an affair with his stenographer . . ."

* * * *

In the light of these authoritative utterances, you may well give serious consideration to marrying the man you have been going with the past several years; who has many fine qualities and whose only handicap is that he lacks certain characteristics you would like your husband to possess. You may be wasting the most precious years of your life awaiting the unlikely arrival of some man whose mannerisms and appearance will click with certain preconceived notions of what your Ideal Man must be like. You can avoid this futile dalliance by sanely choosing from the candidates at hand the man best qualified to intimately and generously share with you the adventure of living.

Your misgivings lest you may one day regret your choice of husband reminds me of a story, the details of which I have now completely forgotten. But it concerned a man of uncertain mind who approached a sage to ask him whether or not he should marry. The sage advised him, "Whichever you do, you'll regret it." M. H.

Danger Cited When Few Lead Youths' Sports

More to Be Received in Games Than Sitting Idly in Grandstands.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

ONE OF the most thoroughly read portions of the daily newspapers is the sports page. Some men and boys turn to it habitually to read the reports of football, baseball, boxing and horse racing.

However, a typical group of these sport lovers reveals an amazingly small proportion who can ever have had any experience in the sports they enthusiastically follow in the newspapers.

One of the dangers of mass education is that too small a proportion of the boys and girls gets any real experience of athletics. A whole school cannot play football or baseballball to any extent. If the school team is to be good, a few must be intensively trained. The rest are asked to cheer their team from the sidelines.

So the habit of taking sports vicariously becomes fixed and the boys and girls who are not able to take part in school athletics become bleacher habitues later in life.

The object of physical exercise, however, is not to hold an exhibition for others to watch. When athletics and sports become the business of a few for the entertainment of the rest, the purpose and means have been reversed.

It is far better for Tommy to play "one old cat" in the back lot than to know the batting average and form of the league's best pitcher; and for Mary to play indifferent tennis on a poor court than to be able to discuss the probable winner of the next women's championship.

Study Shows Men's Jobs Safe From Women

Feminine Employment Gain Has Not Displaced Male Workers.

THE ENTRANCE of women into gainful occupations has not resulted in the displacement of men, according to a study, "Women Workers and Labor Supply," which has just been issued by the National Industrial Conference Board The increase in number of women workers during the past 50 years was primarily the result of technological improvements which developed new types of work and increased the demand for labor.

Rise Is Rapid.

In 1880, out of each 1,000,000 persons 10 years of age and over, 473,105 persons were engaged in gainful occupations. In 1930 the number had increased to 494,615. The increased demand for labor indicated by these figures was met by increased employment of women. The proportion of females of working age who were gainfully occupied rose from 14.7 per cent in 1880 to 22 per cent in 1930. This increase in the proportion of women gainfully occupied was accompanied by a slight decrease in the proportion of males over 10 years of age similarly occupied from 78.7 per cent in 1880 to 76.2 per cent in 1930. This decrease in the proportion of male workers is explained by the lessened employment of young persons and cannot be attributed to the increase in women workers.

In 1880 women workers represented 15.2 per cent of the total number of persons gainfully occupied. If this ratio had remained constant during the subsequent 50 years there would have been 3,320,000 fewer women workers in 1930 than were actually enumerated. This ne increase in the employment of women after taking into account the growth in population did not deprive an equivalent number of men of employment. The conference board estimates that in 1930 there were among those reported as not gainfully occupied not more than 600,000 males who might possibly have taken the place of women workers.

Enter New Fields.

The conference board's study also shows that increases in the number of women have taken place primarily in other than masculine occupations. Between 1890 and 1930 the proportion of women workers in manufacturing and mechanical industries declined from 19.7 per cent to 13.4 per cent. Approximately 85 per cent of the increase during that period in the number of women gainfully occupied occurred in occupations connected with trade, transportation, communication and service.

Husband Is Blamed In 75% of Divorces

Cape Girardeau, Mo. (U.P.).—Circuit Judge Frank Kelly, who in 23 years has heard 2,280 divorce cases, blames the husband in about 75 per cent of the marital failures he has examined.

The failure occurred, he said, "because the men were so worthless

Abandonment and non-support are the charges most often made by the divorce-seeking wives, he said.

SCIENTIFIC REPORT FAVORS BRAN

Relieves Common Constipation* Safely

Read this statement, taken from an article in the Journal of the American Dietetic Association, pages 133-134, Nov., 1932:

"The inclusion in the diet of a small portion of bran . . . would seem a very practical way of getting fiber which is not likely to be disintegrated. This bran has the additional advantage of furnishing a considerable amount of vitamin B and of readily available iron."

Exhaustive tests, over a period of five years, have proved Kellogg's ALL-BRAN to be a safe, effective way to correct constipation due to insufficient "bulk" or fiber in meals. It is accepted by the American Medical Association Committee on Foods for this purpose.

You will enjoy this pleasant way to prevent the dangers of constipation. You can eat Kellogg's ALL-BRAN as a cereal with milk or cream. Or cook into delicious breads and muffins.

Here's Popular Baked Pears Recipe; Best Served With Ginger Hard Sauce

Your file of cooked fruit recipes isn't complete unless it contains one for baked pears with ginger hard sauce. This unusual flavor combination of creamy ginger sauce and baked pears will be more effective if the pears are warm enough to melt the sauce slightly so that the fruit, butter and ginger flavors will merge into one.

Removal of Small Piece of Skin Prevents Fruit's Cracking.

THERE is so much that can be said in favor of fruit desserts. In addition to their food value, they add minerals and vitamins and a nice contrast in flavor to meals.

While fruit desserts are delightfully refreshing in the raw, there are many times when, for variety, we enjoy fruits cooked.

No dessert is more popular than baked pears. Served with a ginger hard sauce, it is a particularly good "top-off" to serve for an everyday or company dinner. The ginger adds just the right flavor to the creamy hard sauce made from fresh butter. It is rather nice to make up a large recipe of the hard sauce to keep on hand in the refrigerator to serve with baked pears, baked apples or any steamed fruit pudding.

Select firm pears and bake them whole. The skin may be removed but they are seldom cored. Wash and remove a small slice of skin from the blossom end so they will stand erect. The removal of a small piece of skin will allow for expansion of pulp without cracking the skin during baking. Here is a list of ingredients:

1 cup sugar
½ cup water
1½ tablespoons lemon juice (juice of ½ lemon).

Heat sugar, water and lemon juice in a saucepan and boil a few minutes. Put in pears, one at a time, rolling them around in the sirup until all sides are coated. Remove pears to a buttered baking dish, standing them upright on the blossom ends and pour the hot sirup over them. Bake 1½ to 2 hours in a moderate oven (325 degrees F.) Baste every 15 minutes with sirup in bottom of pan. Serve with ginger hard sauce and the sirup left in the baking pan. The pears may be chilled and served cold. Served hot, however, makes the hard sauce melt a little and the flavor of pears and ginger sauce combine very effectively.

To make ginger hard sauce use:
½ cup butter
1½ cups confectioner's sugar
1 tablespoon sirup from baked pears
1 tablespoon finely chopped preserved ginger.
3 tablespoons cream

Cream butter until light and fluffy, add sugar gradually and cream until smooth. Add cream and sirup and blend well. Mix in the chopped ginger. Serve with baked pears. Yield: 12 servings.

This hard sauce will keep for several days in a covered bowl in the refrigerator, so it can be made up by the large quantity recipe above and served several days later with either of the following desserts.

Apple Dumplings.

3 cups flower
½ cup (scant) butter and lard mixed.
1½ teaspoons salt
½ cup water
6 small firm apples
2 cups sugar
Cinnamon
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons apple jelly

Sift the flour on a board, make a whole in the middle and lay in the shortening and salt; cut together with a knife and gradually pour in water in the middle until you have a dough just stiff enough to handle. Put in the icebox for half an hour.

Pare and core the apples. Roll out the dough to about ¼-inch thickness and cut into rounds about twice the size of the apple; place an apple on each round of dough, sprinkle with cinnamon and sugar, and fill the cavity with a little apple jelly; then catch the rims firmly together so that the apples are entirely inclosed. Put the dumplings in a shallow pan, put a dab of butter on each one, sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon and pour a cup of water in the bottom of the pan. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) about 45 minutes, basting often until done. Serve with hard sauce.

Apple dumplings are made this way in the South, except that the apples are sliced or chopped, and rich cream is served with them as well as the hard sauce.

Apple Pan Dowdy.

4 tart apples
¾ cup sugar
1 tablespoon butter
Cinnamon
Baking powder biscuit dough

Peel and core the apples and cut them in eighths; put them in a pietin and sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon and dot with butter. Roll out biscuit dough to ½-inch thickness; cover apples with it and bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees Fahrenheit) one-half hour. Take out of oven, invert onto serving dish so that the apples will be on top. Serve with hard sauce.

Avocados, Bananas A la Langford Are Delights to Palate

Her recipe follows:

Halve small avocados, removing the pits, but leaving in their shells. Fill with a dressing made of chopped date meats mixed with cottage cheese and a dash of lime juice. Spinkle with fragments of grapefruit and oranges and place in the refrigerator for an hour before serving.

Miss Langford also is proud of her fried bananas, which she learned to prepare in her native State, Florida, before she won radio fame that paved the way for her screen career. Here's her favorite dish:

Cut peeled bananas in three slices each. Melt butter in pan, and when hot place slices a few at a time, without crowding. Brown slightly on both sides, remove with a spatula and lay on a hot platter. Put fresh lime juice on each slice and serve with boiled rice.

Liver With Tomatoes.

Cut calf's liver into 1½-inch squares and salt. Cut strips of bacon into squares. Place on skewers, using alternate squares of liver and bacon and a mushroom cap to tip the skewer. Place on heated broiler, 4 inches under the broiler flame and broil for 12 to 15 mintes, turning occasionally to brown evenly. Serve with halves of tomatoes topped with buttered crumbs and broiled with the meat.

Recipe Contest For Chocolate Desserts Begins

Winners Have Chance at Grand Prizes to Be Given Later.

CHOCOLATE desserts are the subject of The Post's recipe contest starting today. This is the second of a series of six weekly contests to continue until Easter. Four grand prizes will be awarded the finalists in this recipe tournament.

Six $1 prizes will be given for the best chocolate dessert recipes submitted in this week's contest.

If you can make a foamy luscious chocolate pie that is neither too gooey or too stiff, send in your recipe. If you can make a chocolate cake with the kind of frosting that won't run or won't crack, let readers of The Post's food pages know your secret. Or perhaps you can concoct a delicious chocolate pudding or a delectable chocolate drink or a chocolate ice cream that is smooth as velvet.

If you win one of the six $1 prizes in this contest you will be eligible for one of the four grand prizes. The first final prize is a complete waffle set of non-tarnishing chromium iron, a matching tray, sirup pitcher, deep batter bowl and ladle. Second grand prize is an electric iron, scorch proof, which has a switch indicating the perfect heat for every type of fabric. Third grand prize is an electrically heated casserole which also serves as a utility pan for the kitchen. The fourth grand prize is an electric clock particularly appropriate for the kitchen.

This recipe contest is open to everyone except Post employes. Be sure that your entry in this week's contest—the one for chocolate deserts—is mailed to Dorothea Duncan, home economics editor of The Post, to reach her not later than next Saturday morning.

Prizewinners in the contest ending today will be announced in next week's food pages.

Fashion Sponsors Subtlety in Color

Colors and clever color schemes will play a more important part than ever in the feminine costume this season. Early showings favored brilliant, clear colors, but now fashion sponsors colors whose chief charm lies in their subtlety. Soft grays — and it's anybody's guess whether that delightful color combination, gray and lavender, will continue to be regarded as "old lady" or whether it will blossom forth this season as very "bright young thing"—deep clay tones, a luscious shade known as maple sugar (inspired by the Goya paintings), toast, Malacco brown (the same color as the cane), rusty browns and an infinite variety of those not-quite-beige tones.

There is an air of real distinction about these new "false" shades. And the truly well-groomed are taking advantage of it by carrying out this "off" touch in the rest of their costumes. They are wearing off-colored shoes, handbags, gloves —even fingernails! A recently introduced polish, known as rust, carries out that same tantalizing indefinable "false" color tone that Paris—and New York—find so intriguing.

Swedish Bread Helps Appetite; Here's a Recipe

Sweetened Loaves Provide a Welcome Change in Daily Diet.

Food travels are fun when one cannot go far from one's actual fireside. A menu, a fish, or even a different kind of cake or bread from some other lan dis always a spur to the imagination and a stimulus to jaded appetites.

The breads of other countries are a story in themselves. Here is a recipe for Swedish coffee bread, brought from a farm home in Sweden and tested by the Bureau of Home Economics of the Department of Agriculture. This bread, which is sweetened and delicately flavored with cardamom seeds, is intended to be served with coffee in the afternoon or for lunch or supper.

It is especially good toasted. Swedish homemakers are very skillful in the way they braid strips of the dough into a long loaf, and also in the way they fashion fancy rolls in the form of half moons and knots.

1 pint milk, 1 cake yeast, 1 cup sugar, ¼ cup fat, 1½ teaspoons salt, 20 cardamom seeds, shelled and pounded fine; 7½ to 8 cups sifted flour.

Scald the milk in a double boiler. Take out one-half cup of the milk, and when lukewarm add the yeast to soften. To the hot milk add the sugar, fat, salt and cardamom seeds. When cool, add the yeast. Stir the liquid ingredients into the flour and mix well. Knead for 10 or 15 minutes until the dough springs back into place when pressed with the fingers. Put the dough into a greased bowl, grease the top, cover and keep warm until double in bulk. The dough may be divided if desired, and one-half made into a braided loaf, the other half into fancy shaped rolls.

For the Swedish coffee bread, cut the dough into three or four long pieces of uniform size, and roll between the palms of the hands until smooth and even; then braid. Put in a greased pan, cover, let rise, brush with yolk of egg, slightly beaten and diluted with one-half tablespoon of cold water. Sprinkle with sugar or ground nuts, and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) for about 45 minutes. This bread is delicious toasted. For the fancy rolls, take small pieces of the dough, roll between the hands, shape into knots, half-moons, or curls, and finish in the same way as the braid. Bake for 20 to 25 minutes in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit).

First Lady Shows Campfire Unit How To Scramble Eggs

A lesson on scrambling eggs was recently given a group of Camp Fire Girls in New York by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt. Here are her instructions:

Melt the butter until it begins to bubble, break the eggs into it, stir until the whites and yolks are well combined, adding a teaspoonful of cream for each egg. Salt and pepper to taste.

More Women's Jobs Filled Last Year

A gain in jobs for women is reported for 1935 by the bureau of part-time work of New York City. Twice as many jobs for women were filled in 1935 as in 1934. The annual total of positions has decreased yearly from 1930 through 1934.

One of the short-day jobs filled was that of dean in a woman's college at $2,400 a year on the part-time basis.

New Vogue for Male Is Crocodile Leather

Chicago, (U.P.).—The Florida crocodile looms on men's fashion horizon as the arbiter of 1936 styles.

Experts in the Merchandise Mart predict an increasing vogue for crocodile belts, crocodile suspenders and even sport shoes trimmed with crocodile leather to replace the buckskin items which have held the fancy of young Beau Brummels for the past two years.

Woodward & Lothrop AFTER DINNER COFFEE

42c pound

We first found this rich, vintage-flavored coffee in old Vienna. Now we import the bean and roast it here—just as it is roasted in that small Vienna shop—only at a much lower price. It has a full-bodied flavor that makes it especially fine as an after-dinner coffee. Its extra richness is also a virtue of economy —for many people brew it not quite so strong for regular drinking (about 4 tablespoons for 6 full cups). We think you will thank us for recommending it.

Custards, Soup Can Be Revived After Curdling

Wholesomeness of Food Is Not Destroyed by Unsightly Looks.

EVERYONE has had experience with tomato soup that curdles, or mayonnaise that separates, or custards that become watery. None of these accidents makes the foods unwholesome. They just make them look needlessly unattractive, and that can be prevented. Some of them can be remedied after they occur, but not all.

Too much heat and too much cold are the chief causes of most food separations, according to the Bureau of Home Economics, Department of Agriculture. Foods made with many eggs, like custards of all kinds—soft, baked, or vegetable custards, custard pies and others like pumpkin or squash containing eggs—are easily affected by high temperature. They must be cooked slowly at low temperature for good results.

It is a protection to custard mixtures to set the cooking pan or dish in another pan of water, but, of course, pies made with custard mixtures cannot be handled that way so must be baked at low oven temperature.

How to Cook Custard.

Set baked custards in a pan of water and cook in a moderate oven until a knife blade inserted in the center of the custard comes out clean. Cook soft custard in a double boiler, with the water underneath below boiling. If you haven't a double boiler, set the pan of custard in another pan containing the water. When the custard just coats the spoon, cool as quickly as possible.

Mayonnaise separates while it is being made if you add the oil faster than the emulsion can form. Beat in the oil very slowly. Even when you have made a mayonnaise dressing successfully, it may separate if it gets too cold in the refrigerator. Pick out the least cold spot in the refrigerator for storing mayonnaise. If mayonnaise separates, start with another egg yolk and beat in the curdled mixture gradually and very carefully, and it will be as smooth as if nothing had happened to it.

Gravy separates because of too much fat in proportion to flour and other ingredients or too little stirring. You want the fat to blend well with the flour, so you use about equal quantities, and thin the blend gradually with liquid. Stir constantly over low heat as you add the liquid until the gravy thickens. This method is used whether you are making a milk or a water gravy.

Cream soup separations are due eitheer to overheating, standing too long, or to the presence of acid which affects the milk. The separation does not affect the food value, but most people feel that a curdled soup is unappetizing. Cream of tomato soup probably gives the most trouble because of the acid in the tomatoes.

The housewife's remedy used to be adding soda to prevent the milk from curdling. But in recent years it has been found that soda destroys the vitamin C. It also changes the tomato flavor. So now we handle cream of tomato soup a little differently and get just as good results, with no loss of food value. the thing to do is to thicken the tomato juice with flour, and add it hot to the cold milk. Heat the mixture, but do not allow it to boil. Serve at once. Even when made this way tomato soup may curdle if it stands too long.

Beating Restores Soup.

Other milk vegetable soups, like cream of asparagus or cream of spinach and also oyster stew, should be served promptly. They do not wait patiently. Sometimes a good beating up will restore a curdled soup to smoothness.

One reason milk separates or curdles when heated is that it has begun to turn sour. Sometimes you can scarcely detect any change of flavor or odor, but the milk will separate when you start to heat it for a soup or sauce, or the cream will curdle in hot coffee.

If there is any doubt about kept-over milk or cream being sweet, taste it, and possibly heat a small amount. Even if it has soured, there are many other uses for it, in biscuits, muffins, cake, cottage cheese, pancakes, and so on, so none of it need be wasted, but for cooked milk dishes you need absolutely sweet milk.

Smart Little Bolero Costume Has Jacket of Carrot Shade

This simple to sew jacket costume is navy blue wool crepe. The blouse is new and important carrot shade crepe silk. And the brief bolero jacket doesn't hide it, either. Marshmallow Loaf Refrigerator Menu

Provides Simple Dessert for Sunday Dinner.

For this is a blend of whole milk and sugar precooked to a thick, smooth consistency all ready to flavor and use as the foundation for this type of dessert.

Marshmallow Refrigerator Loaf.

¼ cup water
½ cup sweetened condensed milk
½ cup chopped nut meats
½ cup pitted dates
2½ cups graham cracker crumbs

Cut marshmallows in quarters and pour water over them. Add sweetened condensed milk, chopped nut meats, chopped dates and cracked crumbs. Blend thoroughly. Form into roll or loaf 6 inches long and 3 inches in diameter. Place in deep mold, lined with wax paper. Chill in refrigerator 12 hours or longer. Serve in slices. May be garnished with whipped cream. Loaf will keep moist several days. Serves ten.

Housework Offers Best Means Of Preserving Beauty of Figure

Sweeping, Dusting and Other Chores Provide Women Best Exercises, Says Teacher.

HOUSEWORK offers one of the best means of preserving beauty of figure, according to Miss Dorothy H. Bateman, women's physical instructor at Cornell University.

"If she works properly the housewife is ahead of the office worker any time in keeping fit," Miss Bateman recently told the Associated Press.

"Take heavy lifting for instance, the wrong way gives you the backache. The right way shoos off the 'middle-age spread.' It replaces the 'spare tire' with strong, slender hips.

"How should it be done? Well, first, when you stoop keep one foot ahead of the other. Then, when you rise, keep the back straight and use the thigh and hip muscles. Don't collapse at the waistline and make the back muscles do all the work. For stair-climbing use the hip muscles, and keep the hips themselves well under the torso.

"In sweeping let the trunk twist from the hips. Tasks which require overhead reaching, like dusting and hanging curtains, are fine stretching exercises if not done too suddenly. All such chores, if properly done, give the Hausfrau good posture, better health, improved appearance, more poise and a happier disposition."

Indians and Arabians Related, Says Science

Beirut, Syria (AP).—American Indians and Arabian tribes are brothers under the skin despite the 8,000-odd miles separating their respective habitats, says Dr. William Shanklin, American anthropologist.

Blood samples of the Rwala tribe, nomadic Arabs living in the Syrian desert, revealed sanguinary kinship with the Indian, said the scientist.

He is attached to the American University at Beirut.

Walsh Assails Browder's Talk On U. S. Reds

Communist Has Disobeyed 'Moscow Orders,' Priest Says.

Failure of Earl Browder, Communist spokesman, to urge re-election of President Roosevelt in a radio speech Thursday, was described as a deperature from "Moscow instructions" last night by Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, S. J., Georgetown University vice president, in a lecture at the university.

The President's name was injected into the speech by the educator as he assailed Browder and the Communist Party for attempting to substitute a Soviet system for the American form of Government.

"In one point only," Father Walsh said, "did Browder depart from the instructions of his superiors in Moscow.

"He attacked instead of supporting President Roosevelt, whereas the policy of Moscow is just the opposite. Comrade Dimitrov, guiding spirit of the recent congress (of the Communist Internationale in Moscow), when referring to political conditions in the United States, had laid down the general principle: "'The Communist Party should support the election of President Roosevelt because his defeat might enable the forces now opposing our forces to give us a body blow.'"

Father Walsh denounced the Browder speech as "a typical demonstration of the Communist methodology" and charged the American Communist Party is controlled from Moscow by the Third Internationale.

Did Not Mention Prisoners.

He recalled how one of the leaders at the congress in Moscow urged the members to emulate the soldiers in the legend of the conquest of Troy who surprised and overpowered the enemy by entering the walled city concealed in a wooden horse.

"The new tactics," Walsh said, "designed to increase the effectiveness of the party during the uncertainities of the present distress, ordered every section to hold out an olive branch, a springe to catch woodcocks. That, Mr. Browder did very faithfully, mounted on his Trojan horse. The steed is all groomed and ready to take the American comrades for a ride."

Walsh told of Browder's proposal for a Farmer-Worker Party here to eliminate unemployment and added:

"Following the program agreed on in Moscow he did not mention the fact that there are some 1,200,000 political prisoners in Soviet detention camps today and on Solovetsky Island where they have been sentenced to slow death for daring to exercise the right of free speech which Mr. Browder enjoyed.

"They are digging canals in water to their hips and freezing in lumber camps cutting wood for export.

"Mr. Bowder very wisely refrained, in his radio address, from telling the workers and farmers that over 4,000,000 of their fellows were deliberately sentenced to the lingering death of starvation in 1933 for daring even to think the offensive language which he employed yesterday against the President of the United States."

In New York City, over the microphone in which tremulous-voiced Eard Browder, known as "The Kansas Boy Who Made Good in Moscow," had pleaded for a third party composed of farmers, laborers and the "middle class," Representative James Hamilton Fish made an onslaught on the New Deal last night.

Instead of directly answering Browder, Fish transferred his attack to the Brain Trust, and charged that there is no real reason for keeping Communists off the air when "radicals, Socialists and near-Communists of the New Deal brain trust can get as much time as they want."

Browder spoke the night before, from a prepared and closely followed address, previously submitted to the Columbia Broadcasting System, under the threat of being cut off the air instantly if he deviated from it. Columbia yesterday received numerous reports that member stations had cut Browder off.

Rep. Fish's Reply Scored.

Fish "may as well be in hell without a fan" as try to combat communism with Republican catchwords, Representative John D. Dingell (Democrat), Michigan, said last night in a roasting telegram to William S. Paley, president of the Columbia Broadcasting Corp.

The text of the telegram follows:

"Just heard the heroic speech of my colleague in defense of Republican capitalism. Poor Fish answered Mr. Browder with about as much courage and not any more principle than a pickpocket who slyly robs the unsuspecting American citizen.

"Fish stole the opportunity and free radio time to blow up Bill Borah to the bursting point after a slimy attack on the Democratic party and the New Deol which stopped communism and revolution dead in its tracks when Roosevelt was elected.

"He may as well be in hell without a fan as to try and combat communism with the old worn-out Republican catch-phrases while disregarding the needs of the people."

Paley Resignation Demanded.

New York, March 6 (AP).—Bernarr MacFadden, publisher, today issued a statement in which he demanded the resignation of President William Paley, of the Columbia Broadcasting System because C. B. S. last night broadcast a speech by Earl Browder, Communist.

MacFadden said, "a self-respecting citizen should ever again speak before a Columbia microphone until the company has purged itself of its Paleys and its Browders."

Browder Speech Protested.

Chicago, March 6 (AP).—Catherine Curtis, national director of Women Investors in America, Inc., protested today in a telegram to the Columbia Broadcasting System that last night's address by Earl Browder, secretary of the Communist Party, "was a destructive alien attack upon this country and its Government."

In her telegram to William Paley, New York, president of the broadcasting company, she requested time on the air "to present women's views on the subject."

Ken Maynard Sued.

Los Angeles, March 6 (AP).—Virginia Healy sued Ken Maynard, movie star, and his wife for $11,500 damages today, alleging they beat her while she was Maynard's secretary.

Sole Public Tribute to Holmes Is Paid by His Ex-Messenger

Negro, 74, Now Guard at New Supreme Court Building, Marks Anniversary of Justice's Passing With Press Notice.

His hair thin and gray, his slim body bent by age, Arthur A. Thomas, 74-year-old Negro messenger, who served the late "grand old man" of the Supreme Court, Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, for 20 years, walks humbly through life.

But yesterday, on the first anniversary of the death of Mr. Justice Holmes, Thomas took time to remember his kindly and wise employer, and straightened his shoulders as he inserted a tribute to the great jurist in a Washington newspaper.

As far as could be determined, the venerable black man, now veteran guard at the outer gates of the ornate new Supreme Court Building, was the only individual in the Capital to publicly recall the solemn anniversary of Mr. Justice Holmes.

The memorial notice, printed in the special section of the classified advertisements reserved for such a purpose, said:

"Holmes, Oliver Wendell. In sad remembrance of the late Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, Oliver Wendell Holmes, who passed to his reward one year ago today, March 6, 1935.

Death is the gate to endless joy, but we dread to enter there.

His old messenger, Arthur A. Thomas."

"'How are things at the court, and how are getting along?'"

Thomas began his service as a Supreme Court messenger about 35 years ago. None of the justices he served is now alive. A private messenger has been assigned to each justice since the first days of the 146-year-old court.

During the summer time Thomas used to live in the Holmes household when the late great justice was away.

He was born in West Virginia in 1862, and was an infant when Mr. Justice Holmes was wounded thrice in the War Between the States.

Bidding Duels.

When partners become angry at each other and engage in bidding duels, each determined that he will be the declarer no matter how high he has to go, the results are apt to be rather tragic. I have seen "spite contracts" go down as many as 12 tricks.

This sort of feud, fortunately very rare, is so unsportsmanlike that no punishment is too severe. Nevertheless, I had to admire the opponents in one of these lamentable affairs who, recognizing what was going on, refrained from doubling on the theory that they would be "shooting birds on the ground."

Crime Pays This Time.

Occasionally (which still is too often) one of these duels will have a fantastically lucky outcome. Picture the poor opponents in the following hand.

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
2 spades	Pass	3 hearts	Pass
3 spades	Pass	4 hearts	Pass
6 spades	Pass	7 hearts	Pass
7 spades	Double	7 no trump	Pass
Pass	Double	Pass	Pass

Redouble [final bid]

North was so furious that I am sure he would have bid eight spades (which he could have been forced to play) had he not realized that South always would top him in no trump. So he had to take out his venom in a glare of pure hatred and a redouble that he thought would cost an extra thousand or two.

West made his natural opening of the diamond jack and declarer faced a horrible prospect. With not even one heart in the dummy, there was no sure entry to his own hand. He couldn't realize how fortunate this actually was. He was forced, much against his will, to the only line of play that could succeed. He cashed dummy's diamonds, East discarding a spade, and then laid down the ace and king of clubs. The first miracle happened. The doubleton queen fell! This was, in fact, a double miracle, because it had a two-fold result. The mere establishment of declarer's jack as a good trick and as entry was not fatal to the defenders, but on the third club lead East was squeezed! Rather than blank his spade king he let go a heart, but his relief was only temporary. South won the jack of clubs and banged down the ace of hearts. West, with a snarl, parted with his king. Five more hearts were run off and the spade ace cashed for the thirteenth trick.

To give them their due, North and South were heartily ashamed of themselves. East and West sat in a stunned silence for several long moments until East wearily raised his head and said in an anguished tone: "Well, I hope you boys will stay friendly from now on!"

EPIC Ignored In Democratic Primary Slate

Washington List Omits Advocates; Hoover to Speak Tonight.

Out of the week's political turmoil, ranging from the radio debut of communism in the United States to the grudging admission in Baltimore by Senator Millard E. Tydings, of Maryland, that he would support the New Deal in the coming election, there came yesterday the following developments:

1. Announcement by the Democratic National Committee in Washington of a "corrected list" of Democrats to enter the California primary May 5, on which names of EPIC sympathizers were missing.

2. Colorado Republican Party leaders boarded a special train last night to go to Colorado Springs, where former President Herbert Hoover will speak tonight.

3. Carl G. Bachmann, chairman of the Borah-for-President committee, announced that Senator Borah would open his Illinois campaign at the Chicago Civic Opera House, March 21.

4. National Republican committeemen and State chairmen from fifteen Midwestern States, at a "grass roots" gathering in Chicago, proposed an organization to be known as "Republican Volunteers," to rally lethargic non-voting Republicans to the polls next autumn.

California Situation.

The California situation gave promise of developing fever-heat symptoms shortly. On February 21, after prolonged parleys among President Roosevelt, Postmaster General James A. Farley and Democratic State Chairman Culbert Olson, a compromise slate was announced, in which supporters of Senator William G. McAdoo, conservative Democratic chief, predominated.

EPIC workers called members off the slate to join in presenting their own EPIC-Democratic slate for the primary, headed by Upton Sinclair. A third group, the local California Townsend faction, acting without the permission of the National Townsend office, and pledged to Representative John F. McGroarty, may hold the balance of power in California, it appears. EPICs and conservative Democrats are generally believed to be about equally divided in strength.

Both groups are expected to unbend somewhat, in an attempt to win the support of the Townsendites, to secure control of the Democratic delegation from California at the June National convention.

The Associated Press reported that 3,200 tickets had been distributed for Hoover's Colorado address, and loudspeakers were installed for the benefit of standees. The former Republican chief will speak on "The Chance of Youth."

Lectures Continued.

Harry Gaze, of London, England, continues a course of public lectures on "Conservative Psychology, Applied to Health, Youth and Success," tonight, tomorrow night and Monday night in the Willard Hotel. Mr. Gaze, who has been a lecturer and traveler since 1898, recently returned from a trip around the world.

Citizens Seek Right to Run Local Affairs

Burroughs Association Would Eliminate 'Contribution.'

Also Adopts Resolution to Restrict Stores Selling Liquor.

Aroused by Representative Thomas L. Blanton's statement that the Federal Government should allot no appropriation to the District of Columbia, the Burroughs Citizens' Association last night, unanimously adopted a resolution accepting the "challenge of Congress to eliminate the so-called 'contribution'" and providing that the people of the District of Columbia "should have the right to run their affairs in accordance with American principles of government."

The meeting also adopted a resolution providing that liquor should be sold only in stores dealing exclusively in liquor, and then only for off-premises consumption. The number of liquor stores in the District should be limited to 250, the provision continued, and it should be unlawful to import liquor into the District without paying the District tax.

The association approved the Jenckes bill to give policemen and firemen half pay on retirement, and endorsed Vernon E. West for Corporation Counsel. It was voted a letter should be written to the Commissioners recommending West.

Mrs. Jesse Adkins addressed the Association advocating a changed form of juvenile legislation to transfer the cases from criminal to chancery courts, substitute private for public hearings, and call for thorough social investigation of juvenile delinquents.

The Chillum Park Citizen's Association, at their monthly meeting last night in the Keene School, went on record as being opposed to the legalization of horse racing in the District.

A resolution opposing elimination of the "consent" clause in the zoning laws was not seconded and the matter was referred to committee.

Election of new officers was deferred, and it was decided to call a special meeting soon for that purpose. Thomas W. Joy presided.

Alley Authority Claims Victory In Property Suit

Wins Reduction of $21,000 in Douglas Court Action; Four Lots Involved.

The District Alley Dwelling Authority yesterday claimed a victory in its first condemnation suit against Washington property owners.

The owners asked $5,280 for property to be developed by the authority. A jury in the court of District Supreme Court Justice Oscar R. Luhring awarded the owners $3,180. John Ihlder, executive officer of the authority, termed the verdict "satisfactory."

In a statement, the authority said the decision demonstrated the effectiveness of a new PWA policy of abandoning condemnation proceedings to local agencies following PWA's failure in Washington and other cities to obtain favorable court action in similar suits.

The authority's case was brought against owners of four lots in Douglas court northeast and the settlement of the suit removed the last obstacle to the development of the section.

Attorneys for the owners considered raising the question of constitutionality, but decided against it, the authority's statement said.

The authority was represented by Henry W. Glassie and Alexander H. Bell, jr., of the Department of Justice, and Maurice W. Brooks, attorney for the authority.

Negro Jailed on Liquor And Hit-and-Run Counts

John Leek, alias John Leach, 37, colored, 716 Lamont street northwest, was in jail last night after breaking through a police cordon near Second and F streets northeast with, officers said, 42 quarts of whisky in his car.

According to police, Leek's machine smashed into a police car in making a getaway through an alley in the 200 block of Second street. He was later arrested by Sergt. George C. Deyoe and William M. McEwen of the vice squad and booked at headquarters on charges of possessing untaxed liquor and leaving after a collision.

Composer's Sister Smiles Through Tears; Scouts Aid in Tribute.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

Eighteen years ago John Philip Sousa presented a flag to a Boy Scout troop in Detroit. One wide-eyed lad, Lawrence J. Bach, was particularly impressed and straightway made the march composer his hero.

Yesterday Bach had an opportunity to pay tribute, if not to Sousa, at least to his memory. It was the fourth anniversary of the bandmaster's death. The former Detroit Boy Scout, now a Government employe, held a memorial service at the grave in Congressional Cemetery.

Sousa's sister, Mrs. Catherine Varela, small and bravely smiling, was there. So were 20 Boy Scouts from Washington's Troop 10, with their scoutmaster, L. L. Sharfey.

A handful of women and children gravely watched the ceremony, which began with a prayer by the Rev. Edward Gabler, pastor of Christ Church, Episcopal. Sousa was a member of that church.

Then, while the troop's flags fluttered in the late afternoon sunlight, Mrs. Varela was brought forward and watched with tear-filled eyes the laying of a wreath by Bach.

Taps were sounded, the Scouts were drawn at attention, the little crowd melted away, and Mrs. Varela returned to her own quiet existence, away from the spotlight which surrounded her momentarily because of her famous brother.

Bach recalled that Sousa presented the flag to the Detroit troop, No. 2, in appreciation of the assistance the Scouts had given his band during a Detroit engagement in wartime.

"He was a great man. I'll never, never forget him," declared Bach.

Others may forget Sousa, the man, but his music probably will live as long as marches are played. The story is told that one of his most popular compositions, "The Washington Post," written in 1889, was taken up by dancing masters everywhere as a perfect accompaniment for the two-step, then the rage of two continents.

So strongly did the music become identified with the dance that in Germany the two-step was called "The Washington Post."

Sousa wrote this stirring march for a concert given at the first public meeting of The Washington Post Amateur Authors Association, an organization sponsored by this newspaper to encourage literary expression in the public schools.

'Blue Sky' Law Set Up for D. C. By Court Ruling

SEC Right to Investigate Wholly Local Deals Is Sustained.

For the first time the District of Columbia has a "blue sky law" on the sale of securities within its bounds, it appeared from an action of the District Supreme Court yesterday.

The Securities and Exchange Commission have been investigating the transactions of the Krystal Chemical Co., which has been selling allegedly fraudulent securities wholly within the District and therefore not trespassing on laws stringently supervising interstate operations.

The SEC was checked with a bump when the Krystal company refused to obey a subpena, or to open its books to the SEC field investigators. The matter went to the District Supreme Court where the SEC admitted no interstate laws had been violated, but held that it had the right to investigate transactions wholly within the District.

The Krystal company held the opposite viewpoint, also charging that the SEC act was unconstitutional and that the SEC was merely on a "fishing expedition" in the company's books.

The court decided in the favor of SEC. The point had never been adjudicated before and SEC's rights are now clearly defined, for the court's order sustains and clearly defines the SEC act as capable of interpreation as a "blue sky" law within the District, under section 17.

2 Ex-Tellers Freed; Judge Assails Jury

Criticizing the Grand Jury for returning the presentment, Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue, in the District Supreme Court, yesterday directed the dismissal of an indictment charging two former tellers of the now-defunct Mount Vernon Savings Bank with embezzling $2,181.25.

The tellers, Frank R. Clayton and Robert W. Speich, were accused of embezzling the money in the form of life insurance coupons, the day before the bank closed, in March, 1933.

Speich received the coupons and Clayton allegedly failed to credit the amount. Justice O'Donoghue first directed a not-guilty verdict for Speich, and later in the day ordered Clayton likewise absolved. He held there was a total lack of evidence to show the two were guilty of any crime.

Naturalist Shows How to Run 'Dirt' Farmer Out of Business

The fellow who pushes a plow all day to grow a few acres of potatoes was made to look a little foolish last night by Arthur C. Pillsbury, naturalist and photographer, of Berkeley, Calif.

Pillsbury gave an illustrated lecture for members of the National Geographic Society in Constitution Hall. From what he said—and showed with a moving picture projector—the "dirt" farmer is going out of business.

For Pillsbury, potatoes, tomatoes and other vegetables grow without the usual inducements of plowing, planting and fertilizing. Flowers oblige him and refute nature by blooming without sunlight. And he can make trees come out in the reds and yellows of autumn in midsummer.

Pillsbury does his horticultural stunts with a new plant process which he and associates have developed in their laboratory-greenhouse at Berkeley. With striking natural color films, the naturalist—who comes from the same section that developed the late Luther Burbank—revealed the birth, growth and life processes of plant and animal life under powerful microscopes. Lapse-time films flashed onto the screen the unfolding of flowers brought into full bloom by sunray lamps (in California, the land of sunshine), showing several days' growth in a few seconds.

But about the tomatoes and potatoes—these were grown in water instead of soil, with a little excelsior and wire to hold the plants upright. Water, Pillsbury pointed out, contains seven elements needed to sustain plant life.

Pillsbury estimated that 2,000 bushels of potatoes could be grown to the acre by his process. In the same area, he said, $50,000 worth of tomatoes could be cultivated.

Pillsbury noted two principal advantages of his "dirtless" agriculture. More crops can be grown on less territory and vegetables, therefore, can be raised in winter greenhouses in commercially profitable quantities.

In Pillsbury's greenhouse, he said, tomato plants 25 feet long were raised and the tomatoes, themselves, tasted as good as vegetables grown under normal conditions.

As for making trees put on autumnal clothing months in advance of fall, Pillsbury said this was done by placing ice packs around the roots of saplings, persuading them thereby that October was at hand.

School Body Adopts Plan For Housing

Junior Needs Covered in Program Approved by Finance Group.

Full Board of Education Will Consider Ballou Report March 18

The recommendations for meeting the school building needs for junior high and vocational school students in the next five years as outlined by Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou were approved yesterday by the finance committee of the Board of Education at a special meeting.

In approving the tenth and eleventh in a series of reports on the proposed five-year building program, members of the board praised Dr. Ballou for a "wonderfully fine piece of work and an excellent example of planning for the future."

The recommendations, which will be taken up at a full meeting of the board March 18, include:

For white junior high schools: erection of a second wing at the Alice Deal School; construction of new schools near Massachusetts avenue and Macomb street, and in the Cleveland Park area; purchase of sites for schools near Columbia road and Nineteenth street, and Kansas avenue and Gallatin street; purchase of land near the Powell School for playground purposes; construction of two wings at the Taft School; replacement of the Thomas Jefferson School for which funds have already been provided; addition of a second wing to the Eliot School; erection of a new school near the Wheatley School, and erection of a junior or senior high school in Anacostia.

For colored schools: Improvement of the grounds of the Browne School, erection of an addition to the Francis School, transfer of the Douglas-Simmons Elementary School for the use of the Terrell Junior High, with the necessary remodeling of building; acquisition of land near the Terrell School for playground purposes, construction of a new school near Columbia road and Sherman avenue, improvement of Shaw School and erection of an addition to the Randall School.

The only objection to any of these items was that of Mrs. Mary A. McNeill on the proposal to transfer the Douglas-Simmons School to the Terrell Junior High School. She asked whether it wouldn't prove more economical in the long run to build a new school in the area and abandon the Douglas-Simmons School than to remodel the latter school.

Dr. Ballou replied that the board stood a much better chance of getting the funds on the basis suggested than for the construction of new schools. He cited the delays in pushing through the replacement of Jefferson School as an example of the difficulties that would arise from such a request.

The recommendations for vocational school students approved by the committee called for new schools to replace the Abbott, Dennison Lenox vocational schools; construction of an eight-room addition to the Margaret Murray Washington School for Girls, and construction of a classroom at the school for cleaning and dyeing.

Apartment Flames Drive 33 to Street

Children Give Alarm in Northwest Blaze; Floor Swept.

A three-alarm fire of undetermined origin late yesterday swept the fourth floor of an apartment house in the fashionable California street residential district, routed 33 tenants and did damage estimated at $10,000.

The blaze started in the apartment of Mrs. Mary K. Willett, at 2138 California street. Mrs. Willett, an employe of the Interior Department, was not at home at the time.

Two children, Louise Thigpen, 12, and Betty Jane McGuire, 11, whose parents live in the building, were at play on the front steps when they saw smoke billowing from fourth-floor windows. The Thigpen child shouted to her father, De Lacey Thigpen, who telephoned the Fire Department.

Crowd Blocks Traffic.

When firemen arrived the flames already had gained such headway that residents of the apartment house were forced to flee to the street, and join the crowd that blocked traffic around the scene.

From the Willett apartment, where the blaze consumed furniture and ruined an expensive piano and rugs, the flames spread to the adjacent flat of Mr. and Mrs. John Wright. The Wright residence was severely damaged before the fire was brought under control.

Considerable damage was done by water from the fire hoses, which seeped from the fourth to the third floors, and partially flooded apartments there.

At the time of the fire Estelle Stratton, 19, Mrs. Willett's colored maid, was out with Mrs. Willett's five-year-old son, Knox. The child and his nurse saw the smoke.

"I guess that's your mother's apartment," said the maid, bearing in mind several minor fires have occurred recently in the neighborhood.

Additional fire alarms were turned in by Leon Hill, 15, of Mount Rainier, and Headla Kennedy, also of Mount Rainier, guests of the Thigpens. When they smelled the smoke they turned in a box alarm, which brought all available apparatus to the neighborhood.

Mrs. Willett arrived at her home shortly after the fire had been extinguished.

Breathless, she rushed up four flights of stairs.

"My baby, my baby," she screamed hysterically. "Is my baby all right?"

Seeing her youngster she clutched him to her, weeping.

"Is my beautiful piano all right?" she asked next, but the piano was charred almost beyond recognition.

"It's all right, mommy, my toys are safe," her little son said, remembering they had been moved to an undamaged closet before he took his walk.

Frightened Kitten Saved.

At the height of the blaze, a frightened kitten crawled from a fourth floor window, and clung, terrified and meowing from a window ledge A fireman pulled the frightened animal to safety.

Mrs. Mack Glazier, who lives on the third floor, became excited, and seizing her 10-months-old son, dashed down the fire escape to safety.

Jacqueline Jones, 16, whose home is on the third floor, dashed back into the burning structure to rescue her fur coat.

A brief note left by DePrini, addressed to a girl, explained his action. It read: "I still love you, despite your changed feelings toward me. Please do something for my father."

Terms in Jail Given 25 in Liquor Ring

District Supreme Court Rejects Appeals for Probation.

'Master Minds' Fined $10,000; Two Women Sentenced.

Break-up of the largest illicit liquor ring in the District since prohibition was completed in the District Supreme Court yesterday when Justice F. Dickinson Letts, spurning pleas for probation, sent 25 men and women to jail, 2 of them for the maximum sentence possible.

Arthur Bartolozzi, wealthy resident of Trenton, N. J., who, the Government said, used some 4,000,000 pounds of sugar in his private home, and Samuel Sloan (Monty) Montgomery, alleged masterminds of the enterprise, each were fined $10,000 and were sentenced to serve from four months to two years in jail.

List of Those Sentenced.

Other leaders, Albert H. Smith and Joseph Samuel Bond, were fined $5,000 each and received similar jail sentences. In no case was probation granted, and in many, Justice Letts imposed the maximum jail sentence, omitting only the fine.

Those sentenced, in addition, were: Wendell Smith, 4 to 15 months; Charles Richardson, 4 to 6 months; William Theodore Gilstrap, 4 to 18 months; Henry Landry, 4 to 18 months; John Thomas, 4 months to a year and a day; Frank Guy, 4 months to a year and a day; Blanche Thomas, 4 to 6 months; Harold Johnson, 4 months to a year; Henry Cornelius, 4 to 6 months; Clarence Eugene Ross, 4 months to 2 years; Cornelius Carter, 4 months to 2 years; Julia Beck, 4 to 6 months; Frank Calvin Smith, 4 to 15 months; Raymond Hawkins, 4 to 18 months; Earl G. Funk, 4 months to 2 years; John Mamoi, 4 months to 2 years; George F. Tear, 4 months to 2 years; Belford R. Longnecker, 4 months to 2 years; Leonard Smith, 4 months to 2 years; Lawrence J. Swann, 4 months to 2 years, and Charles E. Hawkins, 4 months to 2 years.

Henry Schweinhaut and Howard Boyd, who prosecuted the case, estimated the ring was defrauding the Government of $2,000 a day in revenues through their smuggling operations. They said at least 10,000 gallons of privately manufactured alcohol were "tripped" into the city weekly and that an extensive distribution system was set up here.

Examination Held Illegal.

Defense attorneys made a strenuous effort to obtain freedom of their clients on bail pending their appeal. They said there were three substantial questions of law involved in the case. They argued there were nine Government employes on the jury, that "wire tapping" was indulged in in violation of the law and that five confessions were read to the jury without a proper showing they were the free and voluntary acts of the signers.

All points were passed over by Justice Letts, who directed the defendants be sent to jail to start their terms. Attorneys have announced they have their appeals ready and will start in the United States Court of Appeals a review of the case. The trial lasted almost three weeks and ended in acquittal of seven men. All were charged with conspiring to violate the liquor laws.

Biographical Drama, Comedy and Musical Pastiming Dominate New Film Programs

Paul Muni Has His Best Role In Earle Film

'Louis Pasteur' Is Hit; Musical at Fox; Other Bills.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"THE STORY OF LOUIS PASTEUR." First National picturization of a story and screen play by Sheridan Gibney and Pierre Collings, starring Paul Muni, with Josephine Hutchison, Anita Louise, Donald Woods, Fritz Leiber, Henry O'Neill, Porter Hall, Halliwell Hobbes, Frank Reicher, Master Dickie Moore, Ruth Robinson, Walter Kingsford, Herbert Corthell and Iphigenie Castiglioni. Directed by William Dieterle. Previewed Monday, March 2.

This engrossing film play takes its place beside "The Prisoner of Shark Island" as gripping screen drama that has the temerity to find its subject matter and basic appeal in authentic biography.

The struggle of the great French chemist against the opposition of the Academy of Medicine, to which he did not belong, not being a doctor, is replete with those elements of ingrained appeal to the human heart and mind that make it an ideal source of drama of the most legitimate type.

Beginning as a simple practitioner of his calling, away from the centers of metropolitan and governmental interest, Pasteur makes his first impression by providing the wine-makers and the milk-men of his neighborhood a means of becoming a little more immune to the ordinary ravages of time and temperatures upon their products. He manages to keep wine and milk in fair condition for unheard-of lengths of time, up to then.

Thereupon, his interest is distracted to the plight of the herders, whose sheep are falling off by the thousands in an anthrax plague that is devastating the countryside. His territory seems to be peculiarly free from the ravages of the plague. It is assumed by the executives of the government that this is due to some miraculous immunity of the Arbois District to anthrax.

As a matter of fact, it is the most susceptible spot in all France for the spreading of this blighting disease and it is only Pasteur's vaccine that is keeping the herds in his neighborhood alive. Nobody will believe this.

Arch Foe of Microbes.

It is Pasteur's unalterable conviction, substantiated by innumerable laboratory tests, that all of the major diseases to which man and beast are subject are germicidal.

The fight for recognition of this basic theory is carried, then, into the sphere of the human, instead of animal, ailment and we have the spectacle of Pasteur making his first experiments on members of his own race in the treatment of hydrophobia (rabies), that dread malady spread by "mad dogs."

Through all of this progression of the story of a great humanitarian there surges to cumulative heights the climacteric qualities of absorbing drama. There is no artificiality, masquerade or subterfuge in the honesty and straightforwardness with which the principal members of the cast go about their appointed tasks.

In the role of Louis Pasteur, I should say that Paul Muni, admirable actor that he is, makes his greatest contribution to the permanent record of the cinema's advancement since the days of "Broncho Billy" Anderson and Mack Sennett. His impersonation of the father of the fight against the microbe as a menace to humanity must remain one of the finest character delineations in the history of the talking celluloids.

Supporting the star are such other players of the first flight as Josephine Hutchinson, Anita Louise, as the scientist's daughter, in love with Donald Woods, and Donald Woods, himself, who does a fine job as one of Pasteur's ardent supporters. Among the others in the supporting company—and it is an imposing one—who most deserve individual mention are Fritz Leiber, Porter Hall, Henry O'Neill, Halliwell Hobbes, Dickie Moore and Herbert Corthell.

Ace Orchestra Returns.

On the stage at the Earle this week the entertainment is provided by Xavier Cugat and his Waldorf-Astoria Orchestra in another program of their Latin-American rhythms that, perhaps, have no comparable exponents this side of the Equator.

With him on this visit Cugat returns to the Earle stage those flawless dancers, Georges and Jalna, two of the most graceful exponents of Terpsichore who ever manage to set foot on Washington boards; Carmen Castillo, the buxom Spanish songstress, whose accomplishments already are known to the Capital; Consuela and Thomas, rumba dancers, whose gyrations are timed to an excessive tempo; the Two Marias, in Mexican duets; Large and Morgner, in "Monopedic Rhythm," and Carlos Zalazar, vocalist, of whose singing this column never wearies.

The newsreel and orchestral contributions under the conductorship of C. Frederick Clark complete a program that can not be otherwise than vigorously advocated as an exceptional entertainment for those who can content themselves with being among the first to view new and unaccustomed trends upon the silver sheet.

RKO-Keith's

"FOLLOW THE FLEET." RKO-Radio picturization of Belasco's stage production of "Shore Leave," adapted to the screen by Dwight Taylor and Allan Scott, co-starring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, with Randolph Scott, Harriet Hilliard, Astrid Alwyn, Harry Beresford, Brooks Benedict, Betty Grable, Joy Hodges, Jennie Gray and Ray Mayer. Music and lyrics by Irving Berlin; dance ensembles staged by Hermes Pan. Directed by Mark Sandrich. Previewed Sunday night, March 1.

Those who remember "Shore Leave" as one of the serious joint undertakings of the late David Belasco and his then-star, Miss Frances Starr, will find little of the original work to bring back fragrant memories in "Follow the Fleet," the latest co-stellar enterprise of Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, which was presented for the first time publicly on a local screen in the RKO-Keith Theater yesterday.

"Follow the Fleet" is thoroughly in the Astaire-Rogers tradition. It affords a lively and tuneful score, with some zippy lyrics, both by Irving Berlin, and provides both solo and teamed dance intervals for

The Wife. Versus and the Secretary!

These, reading in the customary American direction, are the titular characters of the new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the Faith Baldwin story of "Wife Versus Secretary," which will inaugurate an out-of-step engagement on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater this morning, supplanting Mae West's "Klondike Annie," the second week of which came to an abrupt termination last night. The smiling subjects of this photograph, needless to say, are Myrna Loy, Clark Gable and Jean Harlow. Try to assemble a more capable threesome for the sort of thing this picture divulges!

the foremost adepts in the art of picking them up and laying them down the cinema is able to boast.

There are two romances running through the story—one of the former vaudeville team, which is broken up when the male member joins the Navy and the feminine goes into a cheap, waterside honky-tonk; the other, of a gob who doesn't know his own mind and only at the last minute turns up on the side of a shrewd demonstration of masculine acumen in his choice of a mate.

Miss Hilliard Debuts.

The distaff half of this latter game of battledore and shuttlecock is played with modest skill by Harriet Hilliard, up to a short time ago solo songstress with a popular dance band and still a singer whose voice and style may be relied upon to encourage the customers to applause.

There seems to be no end to the versatility that Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers are able to bring to bear upon the creation of their original dance numbers.

From the time of the "Carioca," with Dolores Del Rio and Gene Raymond, in "Flying Down to Rio," through the "Continental" and the "Piccolino" to their present vehicle, this gifted pair always have seemed able to evolve some pedal innovation that nobody before has invented.

The same is true in "Follow the Fleet." They do an orthodox number or two and then, eventually, get around to the business of making an out-of-time burlesque of their last number, in which both seem to be hopelessly out of tempo, yet hilariously and trickily amusing.

There are no two feet in the world that can tap out the eccentric rhythms of which Fred Astaire's seem so untiringly capable. He is the ace man of the current hoofers, just as surely as George M. Cohan occupied the same position among the buck-and-wing experts of 30 years ago.

Going beyond the mere range of the conventional dancer, Astaire also leads an orchestra, performs an exacting light-comedy role excellently and plays the piano with a gusto that few would expect, unless they had heard him do the same thing in "Top Hat." Ginger Rogers is a perfect foil in everything the two undertake together.

Scott Scores Again.

Randolph Scott is about in this subject as he was in the serious male lead of "Roberta," with Irene Dunne and the same stars with whom he now reappears. Miss Hilliard is a demure sort of ingenue, whose singing adds appreciably to the effectiveness of a picture that is primarily fashioned for fun.

There are many others in the cast who contribute to the film's drama and to its amusement. They will be found named in the small-type paragraph preceding these casual recollections of a delightful preview at the Fox Film Exchange last Sunday night. Among the foremost, who might be singled out for individual acclaim, may be mentioned Harry Beresford, reliable character comedian; Brooks Benedict, a former Washingtonian; Astrid Alwyn and Betty Grable, Joy Hodges and Jennie Gray, appearing briefly as a trio.

The RKO-Keith management is so rightfully sure of the high degree of entertainment quality possessed by the major feature this week that the subsidiary offerings have been curtailed to an almost irreducible minimum.

House announcements and the Pathe News complete a bill that is recommended as a bit of spring gayety that no one can miss and still remain on speaking terms with himself!

"ANYTHING GOES." Paramount picturization of the musical comedy of the same name by Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse; music and lyrics by Cole Porter, starring Bing Crosby, supported by Ethel Merman, Charlie Ruggles, Ida Lupino, Grace Bradley and Arthur Treacher. Directed by Lewis Milestone. Reviewed Friday afternoon by Dorothea Lewis.

"Anything Goes," but not fast enough.

This was, you will remember, a musical comedy and still is, which doesn't make it too good a movie. There are some grand, loud and long laughs, but there are also long pauses between those laughs. There are fine tunes and better lyrics (Cole Porter, take a bow, if you're not bored with bowing by now), and Bing is in fine crooning fettle, but Ethel Merman's voice registers shrilly almost all the way through.

Bing Crosby is Billy Crocker, sailing to Europe to rescue Hope Harcourt, a pretty little blonde, from some danger—he isn't sure just what. He is mistaken for Snake-Eyes Johnson, United States Public Enemy No. 1, and since his pals aboard ship are Moon Martin, Public Enemy No. 13 (Moon is sensitive about that high number—the Administration is biased, he thinks—and Snake-Eyes' moll) it looks bad and is complicated. There is one disguise after another, none good, but all amusing. The Pomeranian hair beard is nicest.

We laughed a lot and hard—just as loudly as our paying neighbors, but, in between laughs, we kept thinking "Isn't this silly?"

It certainly is. But "Anything Goes" always was—which is why it was so perfect a vehicle for Billy Gaxton and Victor Moore, on the stage—and originally for Ethel Merman, too, although her film contracts took her out of the cast before the stage piece played the National.

Bing, becomingly thin (or any way thinner), does what he has to do handsomely, but that isn't much more than sing a good bit. Bing and Ethel do deserve great big hands for making the millionth rendition of "You're the Top" still interesting. Charlie Ruggles is very funny as Public Enemy 13 (everybody says he can't come up to Victor Moore, but we didn't see Victor). He's such a lovable old gunman, he should be No. 1 on anyone's Wanted list.

Arthur Treacher is in his best Broad "A" humor. Ida Lupino, as Hope, and Grace Bradley, as Snake Eye's lady friend, are decorative, as is Ethel, voice or no voice. We liked her voice so much in "Strike Me Pink." The music is excellent throughout — particularly "Sailor," Beware" and "My Heart and I."

Two "Names" on Stage.

The stage show has two "name" acts, but not much excitement.

Roger Pryor is pleasant and likeable as always and "sings at" several songs acceptably, but when this young man is behind the footlights, we'd prefer him there in something like "Blessed Event."

The other name is "Fats" Waller. That rotund, dark gentleman has his band along. It has plenty of rhythm and swing and jam, but all of their tunes seem exactly alike. The audience loved them and just rolled over and played dead for "Fats."

The other acts are Gwynne, whose hands are faster than your eyes, and Stone and Lee, who waste time with time-worn jokes.

Metropolitan

"PREVIEW MURDER MYSTERY." Paramount picturization of a story by Garnett Weston, adapted to the screen by Brian Marlow and Robert Yost, featuring Reginald Denny, Frances Drake, Gail Patrick and Rod La Rocque, with Ian Keith, George Barbier, Bryant Washburn, Lee Shumway, Conway Tearle, Jack Mulhall, Franklyn Farnum, Spencer Charters, Chester Conklin, Hank Mann and Sidney Bracey. Directed by Robert Florey. Reviewed Friday morning by Sally Stroud.

There are several nicely-staged murders in this drama, all preceded by misleading clews.

Several characters are guilty of suspicious actions, the actual murderer exhibits the crazed fixations common to the pulp-story killer, the denouement is fairly exciting, the photography more conducive to a feeling of suspense than the plot warrants.

How It Started.

Years ago Edwin Strange (Conway Tearle) was king of the silent films. An accident which marred his features caused his withdrawal, before the era of the talking pictures. He had reached the peak of his fame with a version of "The Song of the Toreador." He had a possessive mania for the story, since his toreador's song was, at the same time, his swan-song. With his supposed death his wife had married Smith.

But before his theory proves to be correct, Smith is killed and an attempt is made on his wife; a cop dies horror-stricken and threatening notes litter the studio.

Since the murderer has vowed to destroy the studio, a state of quarantine is declared, yet the deaths continue. Just before the entire cast seems in danger of being exterminated, Morgan encounters the murderer, who dies like a dog to the rat-tat-tat of a tommy gun.

Bespectacled Sapience.

You will at least laugh at the bespectacled youngster featured in newsreel shots of Parliament's ultimatum that home work for school children shall take second place in their routines, recreation to be first. Says the boy, with adult astuteness, "We must study, study, study!!"

Further newsreel shots: Little Rock's baseball school, Shikat in wrestling bout, completion of Boulder Dam, New York's elevator strike, Mexico turns swords into plows, Whopper wins Santa Anita Handicap, ice jams and floods in various parts of the country, Edward VIII at British Industries Fair, record snows in Japan, dust storms in Southwest, pet horse sleeps and eats with Los Angeles family.

Belasco

"SOAK THE RICH." Paramount picture, produced, authored and directed by Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur, featuring Walter Connolly, supported by John Howard, Mary Taylor, Alice Duer Miller, Lionel Stander, George Watts, Con MacSunday, Ilka Chase, Robert Wallsten, Francis Compton, Joseph Sweeney, Isabelle Foster, Percy Kilbride, Erwin Philips, John W. Cail, Ed Garvey and Allan Ross MacDougall. Reviewed (second week) by W. A. Whitney.

Once again it has been proved that what may be poison for the Gay White Way is indeed meat for the Nation's Capital—and so "Soak the Rich" continues into its second week, notwithstanding the New York critics and a couple of Washingtonians with misplaced senses of humor.

More than three weeks have elapsed since we sat in the Belasco Theater with the management and howled with unrestrained glee at the hilarious quips of Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur. And we still are laughing, perhaps less vociferously, but laughing nonetheless.

Walter Connolly, as the rich papa; John Howard and Mary Taylor, as the young love interest; Lionel Stander, as the "one-man revolution," and Joseph Sweeney, as a G-Man, bear the brunt of the narrative details and read most of the excruciating lines.

Short subjects for the week are no less entertaining than the feature. "Norwegian Sketches" is a delightful tour of the Norse country; "Mountains and Skis" shows the winter sport in the Swiss Alps, and an issue of the Pathe News offers the current events.

Columbia

"ROSE MARIE." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the operetta by Otto Harbach and Oscar Hammerstein 2d, with music by Rudolf Friml, adapted to the screen by Frances Goodrich, Albert Hackett and Alice Duer Miller, co-starring Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, supported by Reginald Owen, Allan Jones, Alan Mowbray, Gilda Gray, George Ages, Robert Greig, Una O'Conner, Lucien Littlefield and Herman Bing. Dance ensembles by Chester Hale. Additional lyrics by Gus Kahn. Directed by W. S. VanDyke. Reviewed (return engagement) by W. A. Whitney.

With Nelson Eddy warbling "Rose Marie, I Love You" to Jeanette MacDonald, and both joining vocal forces on the "Indian Love Call," with the two of the several reprises interrupted by a splendiferous version of "Totem Tom Tom," little is left to say regarding the cinematographic translation of Rudolf Friml's operetta of the Canadian Northwest, where the Mounties always get their man, and sometimes a wife.

Staged against the majesty of the Lake Tahoe country and peopled by a cast of proved actors, all bulwarked by Rudolf Friml's lilting musical score, into which several operatic numbers have been interpolated, the camera and microphone version of "Rose Marie" is just about tops in motion picture operetta.

Since "Rose Marie" has played to two weeks' audiences, and is now embarked upon its third downtown week, the record should be the picture's most eloquent advocate.

The original supporting program has also moved down the street, with the Pete Smith oddity, "Gymnastics," and the Technicolor cartoon, "Run, Sheep, Run," playing repeat engagements. An issue of the Metrotone News completes the bill.

W. & L. Five Trims Maryland, 38-32, to Enter Tourney Finals

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Orlando, Fla., March 6.

IF there is any one position on the ball field about which Washington fans are particularly critical, it is third base, and thus young Buddy Lewis has been dropped into no soft spot.

Washington fans have, indeed, been spoiled in their regard for third-base play by the incomparable Ossie Bluege, who has inured them to the ultimate best in the profession. For ten years the brilliant Bluege gave Washington the best third-base protection in the league and gave Washington fans a sustained performance that was the pinnacle of the art.

POVICH.

It was bound to be tough for any young fellow who moved into the job. In spite of Clark Griffith's determination to groom Cecil Travis for the position in 1934 and thus insure younger blood on the team, he was forced to return Bluege to the bag before midseason. The skepticism with which the Washington game-goers greeted Travis was almost complete, and, though he blossomed as a fair third baseman, he did not perform in the style to which Washington fans had been accustomed by Bluege.

To the fans of a half dozen other cities in the league, who had not witnessed for an entire decade the consistently sensational feats of Bluege, Travis or another of his ilk would have been an acceptable third baseman. But in Washington, they demand something better—spoiled as they have been by the utterly dependable and super-heroic feats of the redoubtable.

At that, young Lewis has an advantage that Travis lacked. He is not only a third baseman by trade while Travis, you remember, was a shortstop, but he apparently possesses a native skill for the job that Travis lacked. Right now, with less than a half dozen big-league games to his credit, Lewis is Travis' superior at third base in point of nimbleness and the ability to knock down ground balls of all types.

He doesn't have Travis' arm, but few among the league's infielders do. But he can throw tolerably well, and on bunts Travis does not deserve mention in the same inhalation with the 19-year-old Gastonia, N. C., lad. If Lewis is no Bluege on bunts, then he is no Travis, either, because he can forever more scramble toward the plate for those slow-hit balls and clutch 'em with a sure-handedness more than faintly reminiscent of Bluege at his best.

They don't know how he'll hit yet. He did tolerably well in the Southern Association with his .303 average, but around here they doubt if he's another Travis at the bat. But they like the way he's filling out and they're rubbing their eyes at his daily exhibitions around third base. Because, you remember, Lewis was a dismal flop in his few games at third with the Nats last fall. But they're willing to accept advices from Chattanooga that the lad, then only 18, was sadly worn by his 150-game season in the hot sun of the Southern League, which would shrivel a billiard ball—almost.

In the same manner that Bluege has made it a thankless task for all future Washington third basemen, Washington fans' memories of Joe Judge placed all young first basemen on the spot. To Joe Kuhel's added credit is the fact that he was quickly taken into the affections of Washington fans when Judge stepped down. Kuhel had to be the best fielding first baseman in the league, and that's what happened.

In Short—

The shortsightedness of the Cleveland Indians and the New York Giants was the Washington club's good fortune . . . the Indians refused to give Buddy Myer a $1,000 bonus for signing a contract after he was graduated from college and was given a tryout in 1924, and the Giants wouldn't meet Buddy Lewis' demands for a $1,000 bonus for signing back in 1933 . . . Buck Ewing, the Cincinnati manager in 1896, cut Nick Altrock off the squad of young pitchers because Altrock's control was so perfect his pitches cut the heart of the plate . . . Frank Petticolas, the young giant of the Nats' staff here, drove a beer truck in Chicago during the winter . . . Buck Newsom is telling the tale of his exhibition game defeat in Kingston, N. C., last fall, when he allowed four hits and struck out 20, only to lose, 10 to 9, because of errors behind him . . . Newsom found some kindred spirits today at the Nats' hotel, where the Florida sheriffs are holding a convention . . . Sheriff Newsom was deputized last winter at Hartsville, S. C., where he also is the president of the Junior Chamber of Commerce, No. 1 fight referee and otherwise a big shot.

Wyatt Lee, 56, Nats' Pitcher Early in Century, Dies Here

ONE of Washington's old-time major league ball players, 56-year-old Wyatt Lee, died a victim of heart disease here yesterday. A left-handed pitcher, Lee created something of a sensation four years ago when he pitched and won several fast sandlot games at the age of 52.

Lee was pitching for the Washington Nationals, when the American League was organized at the turn of the century and continued to twirl several seasons for the local club. Later he pitched for Pittsburgh and Cincinnati in the National League before going to the old Federal League where he spent a brief period.

Lee next joined the Newark Bears of the International League and helped it to win the pennant in 1913. His career in organized baseball ended in 1915 when he broke his arm in Spring training.

WYATT LEE.

Born in Missouri.

The southpaw's residence in Washington for the last 35 years, can be traced directly to his baseball ambitions. Born and raised in Missouri, he followed his early liking for the game by working his way from one league to another finally to find himself pitching for Washington.

After 1915, Lee retired from active participation in the sport only to attempt a "comeback" nearly 20 years later. It was during the season of 1932 that the left-hander, already past the half-century mark, brought his aged arm out of the mothballs of more than a decade and a half and showed Washington that it was far from decrepit. In fast sandlot competition he set a warm pace, winning seven games.

It was the nemesis of many an athlete which finally claimed Lee, victim of heart disease. The death occurred at his home, 1919 Seventeenth street northwest. In addition to his wife, Mrs. Theresa K. Lee, the former major leaguer is survived by a son, Joseph A. Lee; two daughters, Mrs. Jewel Douglas and Mrs. Mildred Haigley, all of Washington, and five brothers and four sisters.

His son is following in his dad's footsteps. Joe played shortstop for the Lincoln, Neb., club last season in the Western League.

Joe Judge, Moriarty And Johnson on Radio

Joe Judge, George Moriarty and Walter Johnson will be interviewed at 10 o'clock tonight over Station WMAL by Bill Coyle.

Purdue Plays Michigan; Tie for Title at Stake

Chicago, March 6 (AP).—Purdue goes to Michigan tomorrow night aiming to stake a claim to Big Ten basketball honors for the fifth time since 1930.

The Boilermakers can do no better than share the 1936 championship with Indiana, but a tie for top honors would add adornment to their already impressive record. Purdue won undisputed titles in 1930, 1932 and 1934, and tied with Illinois and Wisconsin last season.

Indications are that the sharp-shooting boilermakers will conquer Michigan and again tie Indiana.

Berger Signs, Hits First Ball Into Bay

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 6 (AP).—After signing his 1936 contract today, Wally Berger, the Boston Bees' outfield star, celebrated by belting the first ball pitched to him in batting practice far out into Tampa Bay.

It was one of the longest drives ever made in the Bees' camp.

After satisfying Berger's demands, said to be trivial, President Bob Quinn wired Hal Lee, the only remaining holdout, to report in time for Monday's practice or suffer a downward revision in his contract terms.

Mrs. O. S. Hill Victor Over Patty Berg

By the Associated Press.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., March 6. Patty Berg, golf's greatest youngster, fell after a gallant struggle amid the ruins of stymies in America's oldest city today.

Mrs. Opal S. Hill, of Kansas City, who taught the 18-year-old Minneapolis girl many of the inside tricks of big-time golf, defeated her, 1 up, in the semi-finals of the Florida East Coast championship.

Joining Mrs. Hill in the 18-hole final, to be played tomorrow, was Mrs. Maureen Orcutt Crews, of Coral Gables, Fla., who played some of the most brilliant golf of her great career to crush Marian Miley, of Lexington, Ky., 2 and 1.

Mrs. Crews Cards 73.

With flawless control, Mrs. Crews breezed over the championship St. Augustine course's 6,345 yards in 73 shots—only 1 over the men's par and 7 strokes under women's perfect figures. Her putt for men's par on the final hole, which she played out in an attempt to match her medal record of 72, hung stubbornly on the lip of the cup.

Although Mrs. Crews' medal was three shots better than the best ball card of the Hill-Berg match, the galleryites watched Opal and Patty fight it out. They were rewarded with a grand battle up to the final putt.

Mrs. Hill won the match on the fifteenth green, where she hauled out her trusty putter and cut around a stymie from 20 feet to sink the ball for a birdie four to break the deadlock and go one up. Thereafter, she refused to break, shooting two pars and a birdie.

Wins First Hole.

Patty captured the first hole with a birdie four, but Mrs. Hill evened it up on the third when Patty started hooking, missing the green with her second. The first of the stymies cost Patty the fourth, giving Mrs. Hill the lead. Patty erased that on the long eighth with an effortless birdie four as Mrs. Hill hit her drive too high, wound up in a trap and couldn't get her shots back. They made the turn all even, Patty with a medal of 38 to Mrs. Hill's 39.

Three putts cost Mrs. Hill the tenth and again she was one down, but the stymies started to "rain" after that. Patty lost a chance to win both the eleventh and twelfth because of stymies, and lost the thirteenth when Mrs. Hill stopped her with another dead one.

Each Shoots 78.

Both Mrs. Hill and Patty had medals of 78, or two under women's par. Patty's rounds were 38-40. Mrs. Hill's 39-39.

Mrs. Crews led Miss Miley from the third hole on, shooting over the front nine in 36, one under men's par, to Miss Miley's 38. All told, Mrs. Crews missed men's par on but two holes. She got one of those back by scoring a birdie four on the 453-yard eighth. Her rounds were 36-37.

G. W. Five to Forego Olympic Court Trials

Because they have not been officially notified of plans for conducting elimination tournaments to select a team for the Olympic games, George Washington athletic officials last night announced that the Colonial quintet will not be a candidate for the honor. The team was to have competed in District 2, and there was a slim possibility that it would meet Georgetown, which also has entered.

The university announced that it thought it unfair to keep the players in training without having a definite program, and it also is expedient for them to make up scholastic work.

Dick Lanahan Wins Praise Of Harris

Washington Boy Regains Speed and Control, 'Saving' Job.

By Shirley Povich.

Sports Editor of The Post.

ORLANDO, Fla., March 6.—Dick Lanahan stock boomed in the Washington training camp today only an hour after Manager Bucky Harris had expressed grave misgivings as to the big league future of the former Washington sandlotter.

The tall, knock-kneed left-hander, who had impressed Harris with his pitching possibilities last fall when he was called from Chattanooga, has been skating on thin big league ice ever since the pitchers here were ordered to the mound, Harris revealed en route to the ball park today.

Throughout the batting sessions, Lanahan's pitching had been lambasted by virtually every player who stepped into the batter's box, and his added weight contributed nothing to his control. Disappointed at his showing, Harris ordered him into the box again today and then paused to marvel.

Recovers Speed, Control.

Almost magically, Lanahan recovered both his speed and control. With curves still tabooed here, Lanahan cut loose with his fast ball and got it over the corners with such effect that only Jake Powell was able to lay a bat solidly against his pitches.

At the end of the workout, Harris was elated. "I'm in a mood to apologize for my thoughts about Lanahan. He looked like a big leaguer out there this morning. He had his control for the first time since he's been down here and his fast one was hopping. It was a pleasant surprise for me.

"But maybe I was too hasty about the lad. I guess he's just a slow starter, or maybe he's smarter than I gave him credit for being. Apparently he's taking his own good time about getting his arm into condition and that's all right with me. I remember last season when he looked like the worst rookie in camp and then turned out to be one of the best after the others had faded."

Slow Starter.

Lanahan, indeed, has been a slow starter in the Nats' camps for two years. With a sagacity belying his inexperience, he has been content to let the other rookies set the pitching pace and slowly work his own arm into condition. Not until the exhibition games set in last year did the Washington lad cut loose with his best and then his work was a revelation.

Harris and Griffith are watching the development of young Lanahan with a prayer. He is the only southpaw among the rookies with a ghost of a chance of sticking with the Nats this season and the club is in dire need of left-handed talent. Earl Whitehill is the only veteran southpaw on the squad and he is not available for relief roles.

Eager for Strength.

Against certain clubs, particularly the Yankees, Indians and Tigers, Harris is eager to present left-handed pitching. The batting power of these clubs is concentrated in left-handed hitters, with the Yanks numbering such southpaw sluggers as Gehrig, Dickey and Selkirk; the Indians boasting such as Averill and Trosky, and the Tigers owning Goslin, Gehringer and Cochrane.

Bucky Harris will be a vastly disillusioned young man if Pete Appleton, the 31-year-old rookie from Montreal doesn't qualify in his third big league trial. "Anybody who can win 22 games in the International League must be a fair pitcher," said Harris. "I'd sign a tailor's dummy if he had that kind of a record."

The irrepressible Buck Newsom could not resist the temptation to cut loose in pitching to the batters today. Conducting himself as if it were mid-August and the Nats in the thick of the pennant race, Newsom fogged 'em in for 15 minutes. Alex Sabo, the rookie catcher, didn't even touch him for a foul ball.

On Wednesday, Harris will stage the first of the intra-club games with the regulars opposing the rookies. Rookie pitchers, however, will perform for both sides. The teams will play six innings, with four pitchers working three innings each. Kendall Chase, Joe Bokina, Joe Krakauskas and Harry Oates will get the first mound assignments.

Gelfand Wins School Table Tennis Honors

Mayer Gelfand, Central High tennis star, won the first annual school table tennis championship yesterday at the District courts, defeating George Kraft by a score of 21—15, 21—19, 15—21 and 21—19.

To gain the final round Gelfand outstroked Harold Landsman, another tennis luminary, in straight games, while Kraft was extended to the five-game limit by George Foster.

Martin's Clout In Ninth Wins For Cards

By the Associated Press.

HAVANA, March 6.—A three-run rally in the ninth inning, featured by Pepper Martin's home run, enabled the St. Louis Cardinals to defeat the Almendares, 5 to 4, today in the second game of their four exhibitions here. A crowd of 8,000, including former President Carlos Mendieta, saw the game.

The loss was a heartbreaker for Ruiz, who pitched superbly for the Cubans. With the Cardinals trailing 4-2 and two men out in the ninth, the Cuban right fielder, Rogue, dropped Frank Frisch's fly and the rally started. Fred Ankenman, running for Leo Durocher who previously had singled, scored on the error. Martin then settled the game when he belted a drive to the center field flagpole, scoring behind Lyle Judy, who ran for Frisch.

Lakeland, Fla., March 6.—The pitching staff of the Detroit Tigers appeared today to have advanced beyond the batters in training. Lynwood Rome and Jake Wade held an opposing nine to four scattered hits and no runs in a practice game while their teammates gathered eight runs off the offerings of Tommy Bridges and Chad Kimsey.

Manager Mickey Cochrane's club was helped to victory by a home run off the bat of Chet Laabs and two errors each by Al Simmons and Gerald Walker.

Cochrane said today he will carry ten pitchers until the time comes to reduce the staff in June. Two will be rookies yet to be chosen.

West Palm Beach, Fla., March 6.—Ed Coleman, husky outfielder of the St. Louis Browns, not only is hitting the fences with his clouts but is laying down some effective bunts.

And Manager Rogers Hornsby is pleased with both.

No serious defensive practice has yet been undertaken.

Several of the pitchers appeared well enough advanced in training today to pitch three innings in a practice game scheduled for Sunday.

San Antonio, Tex., March 6.—Manager Pie Traynor added two more exhibition games to the Pirates spring schedule today, after watching all his veteran hurlers take their turn on the mound.

The first of the new exhibition contests will be at Laredo, Tex., on March 24, where the Corsairs will meet the San Antonio club. Two days later the Pirates will go to Sequin to meet the Tulsa Oilers.

Al Todd captured batting honors in today's practice. He whacked an offering of Lefty Birkofer through a tree 360 yards from the plate.

New Orleans, March 6.—George Uhle, 37-year-old former American League hurler, "is the best mistake catcher in the business," said Manager Steve O'Neill today as Uhle concentrated on grooming pitchers Dennie Galehouse and Thornton Lee at the Cleveland Indians' camp.

All of the Indians are in camp.

Sarasota, Fla., March 6.—A line drive hit by Mel Almada struck Wes Ferrell on the pitching arm today and forced the Boston Red Sox ace to quit the practice session.

The club trainer reported the ball caused a bruise that will prevent Ferrell from throwing for several days.

Carnera Bout Quiz Off Until Tuesday

New York, March 6 (AP).—The New York State Athletic Commission today adjourned its investigation of the managerial affairs of Primo Carnera and Isidore Gastanaga until next Tuesday without reaching any decision and without ordering purses of the two fighters held up after their 10-round bout in Madison Square Garden tonight.

The commission, inquiring into reports that D. J. Rizzi and Louis Soresi, managers respectively of Gastanaga and Carnera, were former business associates, heard several witnesses but learned nothing to necessitate cancellation of tonight's fight.

D.C. Racing Bill Hearing Due Thursday

CHANCES for legal racing in Washington were improved yesterday when a hearing on the issue was set for next Thursday, at 10:30 a. m.

Friends and opponents of the sport will be afforded an opportunity to testify at a joint meeting of representatives of the Senate and House District committees. Chairman Norton, of the House District Committee, announced Chairman Palmisano, Baltimore Democrat, of the Judiciary sub-committee, would preside.

Chairman King, Senate District Committee, named Senators Reynolds (Democrat), North Carolina, and Carey (Republican), Wyoming, to represent his committee.

A list of prospective witnesses will be announced later.

It has been estimated $600,000 would flow into the District coffers annually should the ponies be permitted to race here. Promoters have been talking for months of reconditioning the old Benning track should the sport be revived.

Navy Starts Grid Drills; 66 Report

Annapolis, Md., March 6.—Spring football practice opened at the Naval Academy today when 66 midshipmen reported to Lieut. Thomas J. Hamilton, head coach, on Farragut Field.

Hamilton is being assisted by the same coaching staff that handled the Navy squad last fall, including Edgar E. (Rip) Miller, and Lieut. John H. Cross, line coaches, and John N. Wilson, backfield coach.

The practice period was given over mainly to loosening up exercises and fundamentals. The real work of the practice will begin next week.

The football coaching staff has been planning to get the squad out for the last several days but has been held up by the muddy condition of the practice field. The initial workout was held under a bright sun which dried up the field.

Driver Off to Attend Olympic Cage Meeting

University, Va., March 6 (AP).—James G. Driver, graduate manager of athletics at the University of Virginia, left tonight for New York to attend a meeting of the National Olympic basketball committee for district 2 of the United States, of which he is a member.

Gastanaga's Eye Cut; K. O. To Primo

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 6.—Ponderous Primo Carnera, Italy's fistic foghorn, blasted out a five-round victory tonight over Izzy Gastanaga, wild swinging Spaniard in Madison Square Garden. The huge Italian, scaling 268¼, was awarded a technical knockout when Referee Arthur Donovan stopped the fight because of the condition of Gastanaga's damaged left eye. The Spaniard scaled 208¼.

After vainly trying to break down Carnera's cumbersome defense with looping body blows, Gastanaga suffered a jagged cut over the eye in the fourth round. It bled profusely and the Spaniard weathered a heavy storm of blows for the rest of the round before getting hasty treatment in his corner.

Apparently discouraged by this turn of events, Gastanaga made only a few defensive gestures in the fifth round before it became apparent his eye was badly affected. Donovan

North Carolina Downs N. C. State in Close Battle, 31-28.

By the United Press.

RALEIGH, N. C., March 6.—The Washington and Lee Generals, favorites, moved into the finals of the fifteenth annual Southern Conference tournament here tonight, defeating Maryland University, 38 to 32, in a bitter, hard fought game.

Washington and Lee took an early lead and held a 17-to-8 advantage at the half. A spirited Maryland drive, led by Willis, center, and Wheeler, substitute forward, brought the Old Liners within striking distance, but they lacked the final punch.

Wheeler made five baskets and Willis four in the second half. Pette, Washington and Lee forward, made five baskets and a free throw in the second period.

Slow First Round.

After a slow first period, with both teams fumbling the ball most of the time, the two quintets penned up a fast breaking attack in the second period. The Maryland offense, when it clicked, was unstoppable, but Washington and Lee was the steadier team.

In the final game of the night North Carolina defeated its arch rival, North Carolina State, 31 to 28.

This game was the closest battle of the tournament thus far. The two teams were evenly matched. Carolina took an early lead, but State pulled to a 17-all score at the half. Carolina again stepped in front in the second half and after the score had been tied four times during the period, Carolina, on baskets by Ruth anr Caveny, took a 1-point lead. With less than 30 seconds remaining to play, Earl Ruth, Tarheel guard, dropped one through the net from the side to clinch the Carolina victory.

Connie Mack Berry, State center, scored three field goals and three free throws to take point honors for the game.

Carolina's smooth passing attack moved through the State defense with regularity. State was unable

Schmeling to Retire If He Fails to Beat Louis

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, March 6.—Looking lean and fit after a winter spent in hunting deer and wild pig on his 15,000-acre game preserve near Muencheberg, Max Schmeling told the Associated Press today he intended to quit the fight game for good if he fails to whip Joe Louis in June.

The former champion, only 4 pounds over his best fighting weight of 188 pounds, although he has taken only the lightest kind of exercise for several months, said he would beat the brown bomber.

"If I wasn't sure I could beat him and then win the title again," said Schmeling, "wouldn't have taken this fight.

"It isn't the money I'm interested in. It is my last chance to win back my title and only Louis stands in the way.

"I never felt so good before a fight in all my life. All we have to find out now is whether Louis can take it. I know I can."

As far as Schmeling is concerned, Louis still has to prove he is a great fighter.

"He's had the softest time any modern heavyweight ever had," the former champion declared. "Whom has he beaten? Baer was washed up, scared to death. Carnera was nothing. Levinsky was just a has-been. Retzlaff never could fight much. He won't findn me scared. He's got to prove in the ring that he can beat me."

If Schmeling has thought up any method of fighting Louis after watching the Negro knock out Paulino in New York several months ago, he wouldn't disclose it.

"I'll figure that out after we get into the ring," he said with a smile. "The greatest thing in my favor is the fact that Louis will be the favorite. I like that for a change."

Schmeling stopped in Berlin for only one day en route to Garmisch-Partenkirchen with his wife, Anny Ondra, who is making a picture calling for some skiing. Max is a proficient skier himself, but he won't risk any injury this time.

He intends to leave for New York about the middle of April and will go immediately to a training site not yet selected by his manager, Joe Jacobs.

Field of 11 in $20,000 Florida Derby at Hialeah Park Today

Brevity Held Top Heavy Favorite

Wright to Ride Colt in Mile and Furlong Test for 3-Year-Olds.

By the Associated Press.

MIAMI, Fla., March 6.—A big bay 3-year-old on which Joseph E. Widener pins his hope of winning this year's Kentucky Derby gets his greatest test tomorrow in the eighth— and last —running of the $20,000 Florida Derby.

Widener's colt Brevity, will go to the post in the big race, the fifth on the Hialeah Park card, the top heavy favorite to outdo ten other crack 3-year-olds named, from 84 nominations, for the mile and furlong classic.

Because Widener, president of the Miami Jockey Club which operates Hialeah, looks with disfavor on the overuse of the term "derby" in describing horse races, the $20,000 feature, biggest stake event of this year, will be called something else, probably the "Flamingo Stakes," next year.

To Yield Importance.

It will yield place in importance, too, to the Widener Challenge Cup Handicap, to be increased in the 1937 running from $10,000 added to $50,000 added.

Jockey Wayne D. Wright, youngster who brought Top Row home the winner in the recent $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap, will ride Brevity tomorrow. The horse will share top weight, 120 pounds, with three others.

Next to Brevity, wagerers were included to favor Pete Bostwick's Mont Blanc, with Jockey Eddie Arcaro up and carrying 118 pounds.

C. V. Whitney's Bright Plumage, Jockey Sonny Workman up and carrying 120 pounds; the Maemere Farm's Maeriel, with "Litzy" Litzenberger in the saddle and carrying 120 pounds, and Mrs. Emil Denemark's good Higher Cloud, assigned 118 pounds and mounted by J. Longden, leading Hialeah jockey, are all considered threats.

Longshots Carry 118.

Comaparative longshots are such entries as the Tranquility Farms' Songmaker, J. Renick up and given 118 pounds; R. W. Collins' Old Comrade, ridden by J. Pollard, which was assigned the lightest weight, 114 pounds, and the Greentree Stables' Jamboree, carrying 118 pounds and mounted by Silvio Coucci.

Other entries are Mrs. P. A. B. Widener's Dnieper, Jockey J. Gilbert, 120 pounds; Weston Adams' Gallant Gay, Jockey Stout, 118 pounds, and the Wheatley Stables' Faust, Jockey Ira Hanford, 118 pounds.

Ward - In - Chancery Easily Defeats Steel Cutter to Pay $14.90.

By the Associated Press.

HIALEAH PARK, Fla., March 6. Mrs. G. C. Winfrey's Ward-in-Chancery, probably the most improved horse in training, ran a mile in 1:35 4-5 to win the featured Eau Gallie purse here this afternoon. The 7-year-old stretch runner, which was running for $2,000 in recent claiming races, won by a length and a half in easy fashion. He was dropping 14 pounds from his good recent effort, his weight today being 102.

Townsend B. Martin, whose Stubbs had won the previous event, was trying for a double with his gray ghost, Steel Cutter, which established the local track mark of 1:35 1-5 under 93 pounds. He carried 108 today and gained the place by three lengths from Mrs. T. Stevenson's Tempestuous. The winner paid $14.90 for $2.

PLAYFUL MARTHA, going in improved fashion, moved into contention steadily when taken to outside, rallied strongly to punishment after reaching the homestretch and finishing fast, was up in the last 50 yards. FOXIANA, rated forwardly, slipped through on the inside entering the front stretch and held on courageously nearing the end. POMPEIUS raced RED BADGE into submission, was shaken up when straightened into the homestretch, but tired during the closing furlong.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SQUARE, $5.70, $3.20, $2.90; DARK FRIEND, $4.10, $3.60; LEGION, $3.70.

CONSERVATIVE broke fast, swerved over and bothered SQUARE before going a furlong, then held on strongly for the final drive. He was disqualified for impeding SQUARE in the opening furlong. SQUARE recovered quickly after meeting with interference by the winner in the initial furlong, rallied under a vigorous drive and barely lasted to withstand DARK FRIEND. Latter raced prominently all the way and came determinedly after the two leaders bumped. LEGION raced along the inside and finished stoutly.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs; claiming. Purse, $800. For 3-year-olds. Start fair. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:29. Off at 3:36. Winner, H. H. Brown's b. g. (3), by Strolling Player—Bob's Mary. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:13 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—COL. BIXER, $9.20, $5.10, $3.40; NED'S AFFINITY, $25.90, $10.40; SHE KNOWS, $3.30.

COL. BIXER, a keen contender during the early racing, moved into the lead when straightened into the homestretch, withstood a hard drive willingly and outstayed NED'S AFFINITY. Latter raced in pursuit of the leaders from the beginning, came strongly when placed to punishment and closed full of run. SHE KNOWS had good speed to gain a short lead, was in front all the way, but tired badly under a hard drive.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—STUBBS, $3.50, $2.60, $2.30; TORITA, $2.90, $2.60; MISS BAM, $2.80.

STUBBS, handling his weight well, was sent up fast on the inside of GOOD OMEN in the initial furlong, drew clear when straightened into the homestretch and had to be roused hard to withstand TORITA. Latter went along smoothly from the start, stole through on the inside of the winner in the closing furlong and was racing strongly at the close. MISS BAM, forced to race on the outside when lacking speed to obtain a forward position, worked her way up steadily and finished stoutly.

WARD-IN-CHANCERY, nicely handled, was allowed to settle in his best stride before engaging the leaders, went up on the outside when making his run, disposed of HIGH GLEE and held on readily to withstand STEEL CUTTER. Latter, reserved while in near attendance of the leaders, swung to the outside entering the homestretch and finished gamely. TEMPESTUOUS was hard ridden to hold a forward position, then outlasted HIGH GLEE when the final test came.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile; claiming. Purse, $1,000. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:44. Off at 5:44½. Winner, H. Long's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—CHANCE KING, $17.50, $9.40, $5.90; CAN TAKIT, $6.70, $5.20; FUSCO, $7.80.

CHANCE KING, showing considerable improvement, raced strongly in the early stages, swung to the outside when put to pressure and closing gamely, wore CAN TAKIT down inside the final sixteenth. CAN TAKIT followed close to the leaders, took command midway of the final turn, saved ground, but weakened under punishment approaching the finish. FUSCO, slower than usual to get into his stride, entered contention at the stretch turn and finished resolutely.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-quarter miles; claiming. Purse, $1,000. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from gate. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 6:15. Off at 6:17½. CACAHLOT bettered his position stoutly after getting into his best stride, came around the leaders to take command and drew out at will during the stretch drive. BIG RED was rated close up in the early running and held on gamely when the final test came. CELIBA met repeated efforts from FOREIGN LADY in the first six furlongs, but failed to stay when challenged.

Berg Manager Bids $1,500 For Furr

Jay Jacobs Wires Offer to Murdock; Is Willing to Gamble, He Says.

A $1,500 cash offer for Phil Furr's contract yesterday was long distance Manager Ralph Murdock by Frankie (Jay) Jacobs, nationally known handler of fighters and former manager of Jackie (Kid) Berg.

One of the most successful boxing managers of this era and completely sold on Furr as a prospect, Jacobs was a motivating influence in persuading Tony Canzoneri to accept the District welterweight champion as an opponent at 144 pounds in the event Phil defeats Mickey Serrian in their scheduled ten-round feature at Turner's Arena Monday night.

Taking Big Chance.

Numbering Berg, Sammy Dorfman and Corpl. Izzy Schwartz among his prize proteges of the past and still affiliated with several outstanding fisticuffers, Jacobs informed Murdock he would take over Furr's contract within 24 hours if his offer is accepted.

"Just say the word, Ralph, and we'll close out in a hurry," the shrewd Jacobs emphasized. "I'm taking a big chance in lieu of Phil's bout with Serrian, but I'm willing to gamble anyhow!"

Having signed a three-year agreement with Furr last July, Murdock late yesterday admitted he was considering the offer but had not reached a decision. However, he promised to reach some decision by noon today and informed Jacobs to this effect.

Bought Out Interest.

Furr recently bought out for $200 an interest Chris Dundee, Norfolk manager, had acquired in him last summer. Furr, prior to this, was jointly directed by Dundee and Murdock.

Jacobs admitted he would be interested in acquiring Furr's contract after Phil knocked out Steve Halaiko (then directed by Jacobs) in a slugging bout here recently.

"There's a rough, tough kid who can punch and likes to fight," Jacobs declared after the bout. "In other words, you can make a lot of money with a fighter like that.

"If the chance ever presents itself I'd take over Phil Furr in a hurry. In fact I'd bid high to get him!"

1,500 See Rinaldi Defeat Investigation in Thriller, 28 to 22

Resettlement Beaten By Olmsted

Tonight's Games.

By Dave Herman.

A SMASHING attack at the basket by Bill Noonan, Ollie Tipton and Bobby Lucas and a Gibraltar-like defense by the entire team last night carried Rinaldi Tailors to a thrilling 28-22 victory over Bureau of Investigation and into the finals of the District A. A. U.-Washington Post basketball championship at Heurich's gym.

Before a capacity, cheering crowd of 1,500 who jammed very available nook and corner of the gym, the fast-moving Rinaldi dribblers set a sizzling pace from the start and smothered the G-Men's attempted rally in the last five minutes of play with a brand of championship basketball.

Another thrilling battle was dished out to the roaring spectators when Olmsted Grill, with a daring comeback in the last four minutes, snuffed out the title aspirations of Resettlement's favored team, 37-30.

Biggest Upset.

Olmsted's victory came as tremendous upset, perhaps the biggest in the tournament, since Resettlement was one of the four seeded teams.

Tonight the Olmsted boys will cross baskets with George Washington University's high-geared freshman team at Heurich's gym at 9:30, and another capacity crowd is expected. Two 145-pound games also are on tap. Twin Oaks Black Hawks, defending A. A. U. champions, will meet Washington Boys Club at 8:30, and Merrick Boys Club will oppose Ehrlich Poultry at 7:30.

Lanky Bill Noonan, who used to toss 'em in for George Washington's varsity, did his stuff last night for Rinaldi, pocketing four field goals and two foul shots for 10 points, winning high point honors.

Not only that but Noonan stuck to Bill Hopkins, G-Men's center, like fly paper, and Hopkins failed to tally a field goal.

The Rinaldi boys also kept on the heels of Ed Hargaden, former Georgetown ace, who was so well bottled up that he managed to tally but one field goal, that in the last minute of play when the Tailors had the game pretty well sewed up.

Investigation used eight men in a futile effort to stop the triumphant sweep of the Tailor boys.

St. Martin's won a 145-pound game from the Aggies, 42-27.

Hines, Culley Pressed in Doubles

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 6.—Quarter-final brackets in the men's and semifinal brackets in the women's national indoor doubles tennis championships were filled today as form took a mild licking in one encounter.

For the second time the favored combination of Wilmer Hines, Columbia, S. C., and Henry Culley, of Santa Barbara, Calif., ranked third in the Nation, was hard pressed to keep in the running. Today it was the formidable metropolitan pair of Dr. Lawrence Kurzrok and Jack Pitman that extended the intersectional combination to three sets.

Normally, Hines and Culley might romp through the opposition, but this being their first experience on board courts has placed them at a slight disadvantage. In the final analysis, however, class prevailed as they won at 6—3, 3—6, 9—7.

The Davis Cup doubles hopefuls had their hands full all the time and finally won because their service was crack-proof.

The two teams waged battle on even terms, with delivery prevailing, until Hines and Culley managed to break through Pitman's service in the final game.

The winners counted heavily on Culley's pulverizing service and the skyscraping Californian's volley smashes while Hines filled in smartly at the baseline. Kurzrok's soft, twisting service lost some of its effectiveness after the tenth game when he broke two racquets and finished out with a borrowed weapon.

I. C. 4-A Aces Vie Tonight In Garden

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 6.—Despite the presence of one of the main sensations of the board track season, Eddie O'Brien, the emphasis again will be on the team as track and field stars of 32 colleges battle it out in the fifteenth annual indoor championships of the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America in Madison Square Garden tomorrow.

Annually the most colorful meet of the season, the I. C. 4-A had added a 600-meter run to its program this year, giving O'Brien, the Syracuse flash, a chance to turn in his third record-breaking performance of the campaign, but the big tussle will be for the team championship, with Manhattan College seeking its third successive title.

O'Brien, who set up a new indoor standards for 600 meters and 500 yards in previous starts this year, will be a heavy favorite for the 600-meter crown.

The team will compete in the Industrial League of the Post Sandlot Association, traveling on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

Catholic U. Ringmen Oppose Cornell Tonight in Last Duel

SUFFERING from a mild touch of spring fever and hardly in the mood for picking fights with strangers, Catholic University's ring men conclude their current campaign of flisticuffing tonight at Brookland, where they will meet Cornell's representatives at 8:30 o'clock.

Win, lose or draw, the final curtain finds the Cardinals finishing with an excellent record, especially in view of the fact that this was supposed to be a dull year for them. Coach Eddie La Fond's pugilistic pupils have won four of six matches and will enter the ring tonight in the role of favorite even though the Big Redmen have been impressive in three matches.

Cornell suffered a shut-out last week at Penn State's hands, but La Fond seeks to discredit this performance in view of the fact that it previously defeated Yale and Queen's College and lost a close 5-3 decision to Syracuse, which is generally rated as one of the East's most potent machines. The wily Cardinal mentor believes Cornell will be at its best in as much as a decisive victory over the home team would go far toward offsetting last week's loss.

A peculiar angle about the affair is that none of the boys is making his farewell appearance, at least none of the Catholic U. gents. Most of the Cards are juniors and a number are sophomores, while Cornell is a predominately junior team. But there will be at least one new face in the Brooklanders' line-up, that

Tourney Title Annexed by Rockville

G. U. Prep Beaten, 18-14; Junior Crown Won by Leland Five.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

BEFORE the largest crowd in the eight-year history of the tourney, Montgomery High, of Rockville, defended its sportsmanship tourney crown last night in Rockville, defeating Georgetown Prep in the final, 18 to 14. Leland Junior High won the Junior High title over Montgomery, 24 to 18, in a previous battle. An added attraction saw the Sherwood girls win over an all-star team, 37 to 31.

The Rocks reached the top form of the season in winning its own tourney, led by its star, Gene Ochsenreiter, they assumed a 10-5 lead at half time, increased it to 15-8 starting the final quarter and withstood a Prep rally in the closing minutes for the victory.

L. Fletcher Schott, principal of the host school, presented the Sun Gold trophy to Gene Ochsenreiter, captain of the winners, and to Capt. Edwards of the Lelanders. Medals were presented to all members of winning teams.

The girls' game was a thriller with the Sandy Springers, led by Marion Hobbs, accounting for a 37-31 victory. The all-stars, coached by Catherine Cockburn, of Rockville, tied the score at 30-all with two minutes to go but Miss Hobbs made two baskets in succession to insure the victory. Miss Suddith of Montgomery and Miss Turner of Blair were outstanding for the losers.

The junior battle that gave Leland the Bronze Cup was a close game all the way, the winners coming from behind at the half to win, repeating their performance of their opening battle Thursday night when a late rally accounted for the victory. The Montgomery Juniors were in the van 11-8 at half time, but led by Jack Chichestor the Lelanders tied the score at 17-all starting the final period and held the hosts to Johnson's foul shot in the last quarter while Chichestor and Edwards ran up the winning margin.

Ernie Dusek Faces Christy Thursday

Ernie Dusek, the forgotten man of wrestling since Dick Shikat lifted the world title from Danno O'Mahoney last Monday, and Handsome Vic Christy, of California, will work in the featured spot of next Thursday's matfest at the Turner Arena, it was announced yesterday.

According to reports, it is a match for which Promoter Joe Turner has been dickering for nearly a year. The possibilities of such a bout developed last March on the O'Mahoney-Grobmier card, when Christy and Dusek toiled to a 30-minute draw.

Girl Pin Stars To Compete At Rosslyn

Davis' Team Will Oppose Baltimoreans; Loop Lead at Stake.

GALT DAVIS has a "natural" in store for his Rosslyn drives tonight when his Rosslyn lassies lock horns with Baltimore's crack duckpinnists in a match which probably will decide the championship of the South Atlantic Ladies Intercity League.

Both teams are deadlocked at the top with 16 victories and 14 defeats and each has but two more sets to roll to wind up the league's activities for the season.

Stars of highest national ranking comprise the two teams, with Naomi Zimmerman, fifth ranking star, leading the Baltimore entry, and Lorraine Gulli, the Nation's second best, heading the Rosslyn entrants.

Others who will compete include: Baltimore, Alice Lucas, eighth ranking; Evelyn Brose, eleventh; Sue Miller, twelfth, and Audrey Mullaney, sixteenth, the latter carrying top average of 114; Rosslyn, Blanche Wootten, Evelyn Alice, fourteenth; Lucille Young, twenty-ninth, and Rena Levy.

An all-time league record passed the board last night in the Country Club League at Lucky Strike when the first place Beaver Dam No. 1 team chipped the maples for a total pinfall of 1,822, aided by a top game of 638. Billy LaBille featured the scoring with a 144 game and 416 set to give the record breakers a clean sweep over the Pros.

The Columbia Lodge, No. 174, all-star team will tune up for its entry in the coming national tournament at Hartford with a special match tomorrow afternoon at the Silver Spring drives against the Rocking Chair Five, star of the National Capital League.

A sweepstakes is on tap tonight at 7:30 p. m. at the Recreation drives, with eligibility being restricted to leagues rolling at the Recreation alleys. Entries will receive a handicap of one-half the difference between their average and scratch which will be around 122. Five games are scheduled with total pinfall deciding the winner. The entrance fee is $3.75, which includes cost of games rolled.

A special inter-city match is scheduled tonight at the Arcadia alleys between ranking women of Baltimore and the Arcadia girls of the Ladies District League. The match is scheduled for 8 o'clock and will be decided by total pinfall for three games.

The national champion Northeast Temple will attempt to regain some of its lost prestige tonight when it clashes in a scheduled Southern Men's Inter-City League match with the leading Occidental Restaurant team. The match takes place on the Temple drives at 8 p. m.

Virginia Medicos Beat American U.

On the strength of Bill Jarrett's field goal in the last few seconds of play, Virginia Medical College last night squeezed out a 40-38 victory over American University in a rapid-fire game played on the American floor. It was the Medical team's second victory over its host this season.

Nat Rookies, Unlike Veterans, Wait for Orders, Wynne Finds

(This is another in a series of stories from the Nationals' training camp at Orlando, Fla., written by Huck Wynne, Washington sandlotter whose trial is being financed by The Washington Post.)

By Huck Wynne.

ORLANDO, Fla., March 6.—After the bus that leaves the hotel at 9:30 every morning deposits the ball players at the park, the veterans are on their own, but the rookies must wait for orders, I've found out.

Manager Bucky Harris doesn't pay much attention to the older fellows. The veteran pitchers don't have to go into the box for batting practice unless they feel like it, and they can quit whenever they want to.

Monte Weaver, for example, never works out more than an hour every day. He takes his shower and is dressed usually before the practice is half way over. But Harris doesn't want him to take off too much weight and if Weaver wants to train that way it's okay with Bucky.

Earl Whitehill, Buck Newsom, Jack Russell, Pete Appleton, Ed Linke and the other regular pitchers tell Harris when they feel like pitching in batting practice. If they don't think their arms are right, they just don't bother to pitch except to lob the ball over to one of the half-dozen catchers who are always around.

But any rookie who takes his shower and dresses before he's told to catches it from Harris. The catchers don't go behind the bat unless they're told to, and the young pitchers just keep pitching the ball on the sidelines until they're ordered into the box.

The fellows who get the longest workouts, though, are the infielders. They're there when practice starts and they're out there at the finish when everybody else is through. Infield practice is the last thing on the program every day, for some reason, and compared to the infielders, the pitchers and outfielders get off easy.

Firemen Meet Celtics for Laurels

Special Dispatch to the Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., March 6. Alexandria's 1936 basket ball season—one of the best in recent years from every viewpoint—reaches a blustering climax tonight when St. Mary's Celtics and Columbia Firemen meet on the Armory court in the fifth and deciding game of the annual city championship series. The tap-off is scheduled for 8:15 o'clock.

Off to a flying start in the title round, the Smoke-eaters defeated their ancient rivals in the first two games, only to drop the next two as the Celtics rallied sensationally to deadlock the series. Tonight's game is expected to produce more action than the fans have seen in several years.

The Columbia line-up probably will be comprised of Gensmer, center; West and Williams, forwards; Apperson and Robinson guards. St. Marys will swing into battle with Buddy and Gene Zimmerman, forwards; Chilcotte, center; Jack Moore and Burrell, guards.

Haynes Stops Tornado in 3d Round

Mexico City Heavy Is Outclassed; Williams Wins in Semifinal Bout.

LEROY HAYNES, 198, sensational colored heavyweight, of Philadelphia, stopped Jack Tornado, 189, of Mexico City, by a technical knockout last night at Turner's Arena, in the third round of a scheduled 10-round main contest, when Referee Jack Sawyer called the bout.

Without extending himself, Haynes, with slashing rights and lefts to the head, cut Tornado to ribbons as the first round opened, until the crowd of 350 yelled for him to hold off. Tornado was swinging wild. He was game, though gory.

Willie Green, 125, kayoed Bobby Hayes, 135, of Erie, Pa., in the third round of a six-round event.

K. O. Clark, 122, of Miami, gained a knockout decision over Bobby Lewis, 117.

Killer Lamar, 186, of Chicago, dropped Tommy Thompson, 178, a local product, twice in the first round for a four and a seven count, and three times in the brief 50 seconds of the second round, which told the tale. The contest was enlivened by a wild swinging fiveman free for all.

Gen. Electric Lifts Dividend To $1 Per Year

Net of $27,843,000, After All Charges, Highest in 5 Years.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 6.—General Electric Co. the country's largest electrical equipment manufacturer, revealed today that 1935 earnings were the highest in five years. Based upon the increased profits, directors raised the quarterly dividend to 25 cents a common share from 20 cents paid in the two previous quarters. The latest dividend is payable April 25 to stock of record March 13. In the two preceding quarters payments of 20 cents were made while previously 15 cents was disbursed quarterly from April 25, 1934.

Net Is 97 Cents.

Net income last year was $27,843,000, after depreciation, interest, Federal taxes and other charges, which was equivalent to 97 cents a common share, compared with $19,726,044, or 59 cents a share, in 1934. Billings in 1935 amounted to $208,733,000 against $164,797,000, an increase of 27 per cent.

There was an average of 55,706 workers employed last year at earnings of $88,746,000 compared with 49,642 workers in the year before who drew $75,227,000. The average per person was $1,593 a year against $1,515 in 1934.

Because dismantling and depreciation of plants was higher than additions, the net value of all plants at the end of 1935 was $35,836,000 against $39,852,000 a year before.

I. B. M. Earnings.

International Business Machines, and subsidiaries, with principal domestic plants in Washington, D. C., and Endicott, N. Y., reported 1935 net income, including undistributed earnings of foreign subsidiaries, of $7,090,530, equal to $9.88 a share on 717,412 shares of capital stock outstanding at the end of the year. This compared with $6,597,362, or $9.38 a share on 703,345 shares in 1934.

National Dairy Plans $69,500,000 Issue

New York, March 6.—Refinancing by National Dairy products, it was learned today, will be ready for registration the early part of next week.

New Hampshire Leads In Electrified Farms

New York, March 6.—An increase of 44,840 farm electric customers during 1935, bringing the total to 788,795, or 12½ per cent of all classes of farms in the United States, is reported by the Edison Electric Institute in its annual publication of farm statistics. This gain of nearly 45,000 electrified farms compares with a figure of 30,400 for the previous year and with the high record of 113,000 made in 1928.

The largest increases occurred in Michigan, with an addition of 8,724 farm customers and in Ohio with 4,865. On the basis of all farms reported by the Census Bureau, New Hampshire had the highest percentage of electrification with 68 per cent of farms connected.

Beth. Steel's Bookings Rise 33% in Year

1935 Expenditures for Improvements Were $24,104,024.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 6.—The pamphlet report of Bethlehem Steel Corporation, for 1935, issued today, shows the net billed value of products shipped and of other classes of business done during the year as $192,836,148, as compared with $168,207,394 during 1934.

The estimated net amount of business booked aggregated $210,033,718, against $157,340,326 for the preceding year. The estimated net billing value of unfilled orders on hand December 31 amounted to $74,015,251, against $56,817,681.

As previously reported, the corporation's net income for 1935 was $4,291,253, equivalent of $4.60 a share on the 7 per cent preferred stock, compared with $550,571, or 59 cents a share on the preferred in 1934.

In their review of the year's operations, C. M. Schwab, chairman, and E. G. Grace, president, said cash expenditures for additions and improvements to properties of the subsidiary companies in 1935 amounted to $24,104,024. The most important units of the construction work were the continuous sheet, strip and plate mill at the Lackawanna plant and addition to the tin-plate department at the Sparrows Point plant for the production of cold rolled tin plate.

Employment Gains.

The daily average number of employes working during the year was 50,552, against 44,430 in 1934. The average earnings per hour, the executives said, exclusive of the administrative and selling forces, was 70.7 cents, as compared with an average of 67.4 cents in 1934.

Concerning the management stock ownership plan, Messrs. Schwab and Grace declared that officers and other employers at the end of the year were holders of 209,320 shares of Bethlehem common stock purchased in 1930 at 91.60 per share, and that "none of the purchase agreements has been canceled for any causes other than the termination of employment or death."

The unpaid balance due on the shares including interest was $18,673,827, against $18,217,424 as of December 31, 1934.

Lumbermen's Mutual.

Earnings, premium income, assets and surplus of the Lumbermens Mutual Casualty Co., of Chicago, reached new highs in 1935 according to the financial statement released yesterday by the Mutual Insurance Agency, general agent of the company in this city. The underwriting and investment earnings for the year total $4,003,437.67 as compared with $3,025,616.40 in 1934, which up to that time was the best year in the company's history. Earnings for 1929 were $2,307,388.59.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Continue Advance in Moderate Trading; Government Bonds Higher.

New York, March 6.—Lip service given to the cause of a stable currency added a little momentum to the forward movement of Government bonds, but stock traders did not appear to consider the implications bearish on speculative markets. In moderate trading stock prices were pushed higher, numerous industrial stocks reaching new high prices, among them Steel and General Motors. Gold currencies were firm against the dollar. May wheat closed 1⅝ cents lower at 98⅜ cents.

Stocks were held in line by persistent buying of industrial leaders, Steel, General Electric, American Can, Allied Chemical, General Motors and numerous others sold at or near the tops of the year. Another dividend, announced around midday, gave tone to that stock. Rails and public utilities were rather quiet, but firm.

Chief interest was found in the motors, rubbers, chemicals and silvers. All will benefit from Government doles, the vagaries of the Treasury's final policy and, except possibly the latter, from the all around improvement in business. In the oil group Consolidated was turned over in large blocks without much price change. National Dairy Products sold at a new high and Biscuit was strong. Store stocks were less active. Burns Brothers issues broke on removal prospects. Colorado Fuels slipped 1 to 4 points.

Mail orders bore up under profit taking and farm implements surged forward, with Deere a feature. Tobaccos again failed to rally. United Aircraft, Boeing, Douglas and Bendix were prominent air stocks. Steel rose more than a point, as did Bethlehem. Allied was the swiftest of the chemicals, climbing 7 points to make the week's gain more than 27 points. Silvers rose 2 to 3 points, rubbers ½ to 2 points and the liquors 1 to 2 points, with the exception of Seagram, which dipped into new low ground.

Currency Stabilization.

Were the markets not so accustomed to words spoken by politicians for obvious purposes, much attention might have been given the address of Secretary of State Hull in which he said that a stable currency is necessary to promote trade and insure commodity price stability. Secretary Hull also notified other governments that this country is now ready to discuss stabilization. He quoted on that point the words of Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau that "the world should know that when it is ready to seek foreign exchange stabilization, Washington will not be an obstacle."

On the face of things all that sounds well enough. It seems to place the Administration on record as now having finished its policy of dollar devaluation. In other words, the Government can no longer be accused of having a vacillating monetary policy, so far as the integrity of the dollar is concerned. However, that doesn't quite take the wind out of the sails of critics of our uncertain financial pilotage. To begin with, the original statement of the Treasury and its repetition by the State Department is only a glossed-over bit of buck-passing.

The Way to Resume.

This country needs no co-operation from abroad in order to end its dollar devaluation. The dollar already is stable, true enough, as Secretary Hull points out, and we are, if we care to use our gold in that way, on a gold basis. All the United States needs to do to make its stabilization de jure is to say so. It would be helpful in the case of world trade if the sterling area would do likewise, but most likely Great Britain and other countries would speedily follow our lead, as they did after the World War upsets.

It would be just as easy for President Roosevelt to give notice that he was through with dollar debasement; that he would not make use of the powers still available to him. He doesn't say that, because apparently he wants to play the political game of having something up his sleeve, to keep Europe on the anxious seat (and foreign commerce as well), to play first to the inflationist gallery and, second, to the soundmoney side of the hall. Europe wants assurances on devaluation, and on budget balancing, but the latter will be mighty difficult to obtain. For all that, it looks more and more as though the Administration is feeling the force of the currency stabilization influences, and the speculative markets some time ago gave up hoping for positive action along devaluation lines. They hope for or fear inflation as something which they think inevitably must follow our huge spending program, our unbalanced budget and the currency juggling that already has been done.

Disparities.

The Burns Brothers stock case is a fair sample of how the Stock Exchange, by its policy of hesitation and indecision with respect to stocks of companies undergoing reorganization, promotes sales of stock at far beyond values. Burns Brothers B stock as late as Wednesday sold above $2 a share, but with the announcement that next week the shares would be taken from the list, the market saw the game was up and returned to realities. The B shares broke to a fraction of a dollar, and the shares lost half their selling price, while the preferred weakened. On the basis of exchange with the new stock, quoted over the counter, the B shares have an indicated value of one-eighth of a dollar each, and the A shares are apparently worth three-quarters of a dollar. The preferred seems to be quoted about right. The new stock will not be listed.

Unfair.

One of the weaknesses of the Government debt structure as many have viewed it is the unduly large proportion held by the banks. In effect the banking system, in lieu of better employment for their reserves, have become merely financing agents for the Government. Government officials themselves have recognized the desirability of investment by other than bankers, hence the baby bond scheme. Come now subscriptions to the latest Treasury loan from others than banks, and Secretary Morgenthau is displeased. He says it would be unfair to the banks to limit their subscriptions to 50 per cent of capital and surplus while "manufacturers and others" put in unlimited subscriptions. Does the Secretary think businessmen "and others" should be protected from the Government bond market?

Colorado Fuel.

The reorganization plan proposed by an independent protective committee would cause a sharp revision in existing prices of common and preferred shares. There is by no means any assurance that a similar plan will go through, but it shows how the wind blows. All that the common would have would be the privilege of subscribing to new stock at $10 a share. The preferred would get four such privileges for each share now outstanding and "back dividends" in some form. What the new stock might be worth is a matter of conjecture, but it may be taken for granted that the gravy for the preferred stock will be much thicker than that for the common. The stocks broke on news of the plan.

Conscience Free.

The California court, in its decision in the Leland Stanford University investment case, quoted a significant passage from Justice Putnam, in the Harvard College vs. Amory case (decided a hundred years ago): "There is one consideration much in favor of investing in the stock of private corporations. They are amenable to the law. The holder may pursue them, and compel them or their officers to do justice. But the Government can only be supplicated." And without much relief, when consciences are shifty as pointed out less than a year ago by the Supreme Court in the gold clause case.

Good Will.

The Federal Trade Commission in its order for Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. to end its special price system for Sears, Roebuck & Co., reveals that Goodyear gave Sears 18,000 of 32,000 additional shares. Presumably Sears now is a large holder of Goodyear stock. The practice of a supplier making stock gifts to large customers is reported to be common enough, especially in the automotive industry, where accessory companies often make large stock gifts to the big motor manufacturers in return for equipment orders.

Curb Prices Dip On Late Selling market continued to point upward.

New York, March 6 (AP).—There were a number of outstanding gainers in today's curb market, but late realizing cut down extreme advances in many cases and resulted in losses up to a point or so in others. Various oils, mines and specialities accounted for much of the strength which was in evidence. Trading was not usually lively although transfers approximated 728,000 shares against 641,000 yesterday.

Gulf Oil, up 7 points at 94, was a leader in the forward push. Others in demand included Newmont Mining, up 4 at 93; Sherwin-Williams, up 3¾ at 128¾; Humble Oil, up 1½ at 71½ and Creole Petroleum, up 1¼ at 32½.

Down fractionally to a point or so were Aluminum of America at 149, American Cyanamid B at 36, Bunker Hill at 82, Great Atlantic & Pacific at 121, International Petroleum at 36⅝ and Parker Rust Proof at 80.

Avery Sees Building Expansion Maintained

Chicago, March 6 (AP).—Sewell L. Avery, president of the United States Gypsum Co., told the annual stockholders' meeting today that he believed building during 1936 would show a substantial increase but will not reach proportions of a boom.

He pointed out that building awards in the United States during January and up to February 22 showed an increase in the home building division of 90 per cent over the same 1935 period on a square foot area basis and were 72 per cent greater on a dollar basis. The large amount of permits recorded during the last half of last year, he said, indicated a large volume of contracts during the first few months of 1936.

Auto Output Rises Sharply in Week

Detroit, March 6 (AP).—Crams Reports, Inc., said today that production of passenger cars and trucks in the United States and Canada rose sharply this week to 84,705 units compared to 64,956 units recorded for the previous week. A year ago this week production was 86,973 units.

With most of the major plants on regular schedules, another increase is expected next week, the report said.

By the Associated Press.

Wheat Slumps Nearly 2 Cents Under Pressure

Closes at Bottom After Active Speculative Sales Drive.

Chicago, March 6 (AP).—Tumbles of almost 2 cents a bushel in wheat prices today resulted largely from bearish estimates of farm stocks and reports of little winter killing.

Active selling that apparently started from speculative sources revealed that wheat was without aggressive buying support, despite persistent dry weather Southwest and notwithstanding Liverpool market firmness.

Wheat closed weak at virtually the day's bottom level, ¾-1⅞ under yesterday's finish. May 98¼-⅜, July 88½-⅝, corn ⅜-⅜ down, May 60⅝-½, oats ½-¾ off, and provisions varying from 17 cents setback to 7 cents gain.

On The Air Today

WHEN the gentlemen of the press foregather tonight at the Willard for the fifteenth annual White House Correspondents' Dinner (and I anticipate an unusually festive evening there under the expansive wing of N. B. C.'s Vincent Callahan) a menu of talent to bring up cheers from the most blase will be served.

The brilliant conductor, Frank Black, will provide the musical background with an orchestra of some 18 or 20 men, aided and abetted by another group under the direction of Washington's Sidney, Dr. Black is N. B. C.'s music chief.

Frank Fay will be present to emmcee the performance—the same Fay who has taken a bright spot in the air firmament recently as chief dispenser of nonsense in Rudy Valee's Varieties.

And just see who Fay will present: Gladys Swarthout, the lovely singing star of radio, screen, opera and the entertainment world at large; Ethel Merman, no less distinguished in her more popular field of music making; Jimmie Savo, pantomimist; Niela Goodelle, songs at the piano; the Westerners, of the "Show Boat;" Mario Cozzi, veteran barytone of the airways, and Rafael, who produces the most fascinating music from the concertina, accompanied by Jemma Hurok, gypsy barytone.

At least that was where the roster stood last night. Doubtless others will be added as arrangements are completed in New York for artists to make the trek to the Capital.

As yet no word on the winner of Paul Whiteman's auditions here this week. However, the first of the "talent hunt" winners will be heard on the Whiteman "Musical Varieties" tomorrow night. The Tell Sisters were selected from the Philadelphia auditions and get the engagement as a reward.

The best broadcast ideas of the passing week belongs to WOL—the speech by Presidential candidate Overstreet, Washington policeman . . . Kate Smith presents an all-star show tomorrow night in competition with Maj. Bowes at 8 p. m. The Bowes hour (WRC) is such a favorite as to cause other radio interests to regard it as invincible. No one wants to compete with it. Kate presents Eva LeGallienne, Dick Powell, Bob Burns, Block and Sully, Doc Rockwell, Raymond Paige and Jack Miller and their orchestras, the Eskimos and others. From 8 to 9 at WJSV.

$50,000 Asked in Suit For Term in Asylum

Charging he was unjustly confined in St. Elizabeths Hospital, Summerfield McCarteney, 1349 L street northwest, filed suit yesterday in the District Supreme Court against Richard Seton MacCarteney and Annette McCarteney Moses for $50.000 damages.

Through attorneys Felix A. Russell and Christopher Cannon, McCarteney said the two defendants swore to affidavits last January, stating he was of unsound mind. He declared he was held in the hospital until early in February, and charged this held him up to public ridicule.
